Letters to the editor are welcome. While there is no limit on the number of words, please write only enough material to adequately cover the subject. Anonymous letters are not acceptable, although names may be withheld on request.

Dear Editor:

It is not too late. There are two sides to this Carmel library problem, still bubbling beneath the surface of this much expanded community since the days of Mrs. Harrison and the noted architect Bernard Maybeck.

The writer remembers the vacant lot where the building now stands. Early-day artists occasionally, during the summer seasons, erected temporary canvas-covered exhibitions there.

Then, Mrs. Harrison conceived the idea, perhaps shared by her husband the judge, to build a library building to contain the judge's law books, their general library containing many rare volumes, and their art treasures, rare etchings, paintings and sculpture, all collected during their lifetime together.

Mrs. Harrison arranged and displayed these treasures from her home in the beautifully designed and executed Maybeck building -- as Mrs. Harrison wished it - and presented the whole to the community of Carmel.

No one then envisioned the amazing growth of our community.

Gradually, etchings, paintings and other rare art objects, together with valuable books, disappeared from view under the pressure for space. Some were stored in the basement and others doubtless scattered. The reading room lost much of the attractions of its beginning, until, to say the least, the whole place is now a bit crowded.

The original pristine Maybeck concept and execution have been gradually distorted to some degree under the pressure of expansion for room space.

Now, to the other side of the question:

Many Carmel residents want to move the functioning library to another location, preferably the Sunset Center where parking is available and opportunity for the day-to-day traffic of receiving and distributing books can be conducted more easily.

They also feel that the high general culture of the community at this time should have library space to care for available research books, art and science study, etc., as well as the best of literature past and present.

A suggested compromise is as follows: restore the details of the Maybeck fine structure and arrange the Harrisons' possessions as nearly as possible as Mrs. Harrison placed them. Those things missing may be recovered more completely than at first may appear.

The restoration and refurnishing of the Carmel Mission shows what can be done.

The further compromise suggestion is to establish this restored building and contents as Carmel's first historic landmark and also permanent monument to the Harrisons whose money and treasures were so freely given to the community.

It is a poor town that can't afford to maintain so worthy a just historic monument as the Harrison-Maybeck unit.

Now, let's negotiate a settlement.

Dear Editor:

On Nov. 6, we, the voters, must decide about Proposition 1, the tax and expenditure limitation by constitutional amendment. It is long and difficult to understand.

It sounds good but experts have found many flaws. For instance Prop. 1 proposes to reduce income taxes, but University of California's Charles S. Benson says,

"The proposal to use a one-time budget surplus to grant an approximate 20 per cent reduction in 1973 state income tax is unconscionable at this time. At the present time, California's income tax burden on middle income families is low compared to that of other states. But, California will be a high-sales-tax state when the proposed increase to the sales tax rate goes into effect. Traditionally, sales taxes place a heavy burden on the middle and low income families. Thus, basic considerations of tax balance and equity argue against the 20 per cent income tax reduction."

From the above, one gathers that Prop. 1 will help those in the high brackets and hurt those in the middle. This we don't need. Better to vote no to Prop. 1.

Dear Editor:

The end of the free enterprise system is in sight. Unsurpassed production with wealth for a few cannot fulfill the needs of a changing world. Like Democles, we wait and sit.

Competition for markets in a world dedicated to military force indicate an end by atomic-radiation or being fried alive by napalm. We can find a better way.

The Marxian forecast with its blue-print of struggle to share and share alike in "nature's golden garden" is within reach. Intelligence and will are needed to abolish private ownership of banks and national industries, before we all go up in smoke and our civilization becomes a memory.

Dear Editor:

The question of determining an optimum population, or holding capacity, for the Peninsula area has again been raised. We wish it were as easy as was suggested in your Oct. 4 editorial.

In the course of meetings on revision of the area plan, it was repeatedly recommended to the Area Planning Commission by the League of Women Voters, the ad hoc citizens' advisory committee and other organizations and individuals that a holding capacity must be determined as a basis for land use planning.

This holding capacity figure would be the number of people that could be provided for in the area without degrading the environment and the quality of life here, rather than simply how many people can be crammed into the available space.

The answer to this plea was that this just couldn't be done, that there was no money for the necessary studies, and that it was not part of the planning consultant's contract. Beyond that, it soon became apparent that no one involved in development wanted to be guided by a holding capacity which might necessitate a cut in density. Given this attitude, if a holding capacity were determined, how could the population be held to that figure?

The revised plan, like the 1966 area plan, is a composite of existing city, county and landowners' plans. The plan allows for an extent of development which, if carried out (and it is being carried out), would provide housing for more people than population projections estimate will actually live on the Peninsula in 25 years.

We are faced with a water shortage and threatened with air pollution; traffic conditions worsen; and plans for improved sewage disposal are bogged down. Yet the cry is still for growth. Neither cities, nor landowners, nor developers will modify their plans, and competition for property and sales tax revenue continues.

Let us by all means find a holding capacity for the Peninsula area. It will take expert know-how, and the money to pay for it. If that can be found, we will still need the will to abide by the conclusions.

Dear Editor:

As a former long-time resident of Carmel, one who participated in and observed the "art scene" there for many years, I find the statements made by one James Peter Cost ludicrous.

His point of view is so narrowly provincial and his eight-year residence there has provided him with no credentials to describe Carmel as being "one of the greatest art centers of the world." Anyone with even a modicum of knowledge of the subject would be prohibited from making such an obviously absurd statement.

In accordance with his philosophy of "the accurate test of quality is how much you would be willing to pay for it," how does he account for the Van Goghs and others in his time who never sold?

Best to remain silent and enjoy marketing your merchandise, Mr. Cost.

Dear Editor:

In our gratitude over the loss of our great spiritual and moral leader Spiro Agnew, we should not question whether the slap-on-the-wrist sentence directed by the White House was part of the price paid for his future silence.

And in our relief at again having a stand-in replacement in the event Mr. Nixon has an accident or follows in Mr. Agnew's footsteps we should be eager to overlook the fact that Rep. Gerald Ford consistently put his loyalty to Nixon in supporting a totally senseless paranoid war ahead of his loyalty to the best interests of the United States of America.

After four successful years of war crimes in Indochina until finally forced by public indignation to cease and desist we may feel secure that Mr. Nixon and Mr. Ford together will make very intelligent decisions about American involvement in the Middle East, with or without the advice and consent of the U.S. Congress.

If we can get the Arabs to loan us enough oil to carry on another full-scale war for 10 years, and if the administration can figure out a way to reclaim the billions of gallons wasted in our crusade to save Indochina by destroying it, and if the average housewife will cook with less gas for awhile, we should be able to save the whole Middle East from Communism quite easily because of the scarcity of ground cover.

On the other hand, maybe we should each day look toward the east and pray that sometime, hopefully before we all blow ourselves to bits, we will devise some means of selecting leaders that does not involve corruption, petty politics or worst of all, idiotic paranoias about Communism.

Peninsula cities to study water problems

By ROBERT MISKIMON

CARMEL WILL JOIN the other cities of the Monterey Peninsula and the county government in a joint effort to find some long-range solution to the looming water crisis.

And, after two more days of public hearings last week by the Public Utilities Commission into the adequacy of California-American Water Company's water supplies, it appears there will be plenty of time for an in-depth study.

Examiner Parke Boneysteele granted the cities and county their request for a 120-day continuance of the matter during the Seaside hearings, while at the same time hearing a motion by Cal-Am that its application to serve the Hidden Hills area be withdrawn.

That request, by Cal-Am attorney Claude Rosenberg, drew heated opposition from the two attorneys representing Standard International Corp. (Standex), developer of Hidden Hills.

It was the application by Cal-Am to the Public Utilities Commission filed in 1972 to extend water service to the Hidden Hills area that triggered the current investigation into adequacy of water supplies. That investigation, in turn, led to a P.U.C. interim order issued in May which restricts Cal-Am from taking on most new customers.

The proposed tightening of the interim order drawn up by P.U.C. staff attorney Cyril Saroyan will be in abeyance continued during the 120-day period. It drew some heavy opposition during last week's hearings from government officials and private citizens representing the construction industry.

The interim order, as it now stands, prohibits Cal-Am from extending or accepting distribution mains within or from its Monterey Peninsula Division to serve new developments, other than municipally sponsored redevelopment or renewal projects unless, prior to May 30:

--The final subdivision map has been approved for filing by the local governmental body having authority over the filing.

--A subdivision agreement has been entered into between the developer and the appropriate local governmental body.

--All surety bonds, or other alternative guarantees, covering faithful performance and payment for materials, labor, and engineering expenses have been filed with and accepted by the appropriate local governmental body.

Saroyan had asked that the interim order be tightened to prohibit any new water connections except to single-family dwellings, as allowed in the language of the original order.

The agencies requesting the four-month continuance were Carmel, Del Rey Oaks, Monterey, Pacific Grove, Sand City, Seaside, and the County of Monterey.

"The present hearing concerning the water problem affecting our respective areas is of vital concern to all of us," the letter stated. It was presented to the hearing examiner by Roger Poyner, 4th District county supervisor.

"Because of this, it is our mutual desire to have the opportunity to review the problem in depth with your staff for the purpose of defining the specific areas of concern, the solutions--both interim and long range thereto, and the rights and responsibilities of the parties concerned."

THE CITIES and county also asked that the May 30 interim order be continued in effect and without modifications during the 120-day period.

"This water problem and its far-reaching ramifications is probably one of the most critical problems facing our area today," the letter said.

Walter Wong, environmental sanitarian with the Monterey County Department of Health, asked the P.U.C. to determine the "holding capacity of the Monterey Peninsula groundwater resources."

Wong told the hearing examiner that since the interim order, some developments have proposed or are considering drilling their own wells and developing their own water systems within the Cal-Am or Del Monte Water Co.

"Monterey County passed a well construction ordinance that went into effect July 1, 1973 requiring permits on all well construction," Wong said.

"Since the ordinance went into effect, we have issued 26 permits in the Monterey Peninsula area. Eighteen of these permits were in the Carmel Valley area, and two in the Hidden Hills area.

"We request the Public Utilities Commission staff to either make a determination or refer to the appropriate agency regarding the holding capacity of the Monterey Peninsula groundwater resources.

"Such a determination is necessary if we are to prevent overdrawing our groundwater supplies by permitting numerous mutual water companies developing in the Monterey Peninsula area without first knowing how much groundwater is available."

L.W. McIntyre, director of public works for the City of Monterey, pointed out what he said were several problems with the interim order which would be compounded if the proposed tightening were adopted.

"My understanding in reading the transcript (of the interim order) is that all development would be predicated upon the filing of a final map, however there are many types of development that do not require a final map," McIntyre said.

"There are also developments that proceed with construction prior to the map being filed. If filing of the final map is going to be the criterion, then is it true that any undeveloped property in the city on which a map was filed prior to May 30, 1973 and that has a water main abutting, would be developable?"

He also asked whether a parcel of record is synonymous with a record lot or a subdivision lot, and said "the order is silent" regarding modifications to existing buildings requiring higher water use.

Rosenberg first asked for withdrawal of Cal-Am's application to serve Hidden Hills on Thursday--the first day of hearings.

"Because there is little, if any, possibility of our application being granted in its present form, therefore it is our disposition to withdraw our application," he told Boneysteele.

THIS DREW an immediate expression of shock and protest from Donald G. Hubbard, attorney for Standex.

"Mr. Rosenberg's request to withdraw the application comes as a complete surprise to us," he said. "It might be appropriate to sever the application to keep it alive.

"That the water company should unilaterally be permitted to withdraw the application seems unfair to me."

Boneysteele indicated the request for withdrawal of the application would be taken under submission by the commission.

At the conclusion of Friday's hearings, Rosenberg reiterated Cal-Am's desire to withdraw, saying "it is in the best interests of all concerned that the application be withdrawn without prejudice.

"We hope, when the time is propitious, to renew the application and prosecute it. But I'm sure it will be in a different form than it is at present."

Both Hubbard and Boris Lakusta, attorneys for Standex, argued that equities inherent in the situation--by Standex, by homeowners at Hidden Hills, and by Monterey County--made it imperative the application be kept alive.

"This whole proceeding started as an application for a certificate of convenience to serve the Hidden Hills area," Lakusta said.

"We have observed a reluctance on the part of California-American to prosecute its case," he said. "It has made no effort to come forward and present its case. There is no reasonable basis upon which California-American should withdraw its application on the stated basis that it may lose the case when it's presented to the commission.

"Standard International has spent a "lot of money in its development and in this case today. It is the obligation of California-American to the commission and to Standex to proceed with this application with dispatch. California-American should not be permitted to withdraw."

Sam Estassi, representing Los Laureles and Hidden Hills homeowners, asked the commission to permit Cal-Am to serve the area.

"We plead with the commission to give us permanent water," he said. "We've been getting temporary water for two and one-half years. We are in a very desperate situation. A lot of homes in Hidden Hills are for sale and a lot of people are scared. I am too."

(The Hidden Hills area covered by Cal-Am's certificate of application includes some 2,000 acres, most of which is unimproved land. Individuals representing ownership of about 10 per cent of Hidden Hills land in 1964 formed the Los Laureles Mutual Water Co. to serve their lands. Three wells were developed but abandoned because of poor quality and quantity of water.

(Between 1964 and 1966, Hidden Hills Land Co. acquired most of the other 90 per cent of the Hidden Hills area and conveyed to various individuals portions of the land. Indian Ridge Development Corp. in 1967 bought the properties retained by Hidden Hills.

(In 1967, Carmel Valley Mutual Water Co. was formed to serve the entire Hidden Hills area from a new well and some mains, tanks, service lines and meters were installed. In 1969, Carmel Valley Water Co. was formed to operate as a public utility to take over Mutual's operations. An application was filed but the application was withdrawn in 1970 when Indian Ridge conveyed its remaining holdings to Standard.

(Standard International negotiated with Cal-Am for expansion of service, but in March of 1971, Mutual's well caved in during an earthquake. Since then, Mutual has bought an emergency supply of water from Cal-Am through a temporary connection. Cal-Am filed its application to the P.U.C. after reaching agreement with Standard International, Indian Ridge, and Monterey County on financing of the water facilities needed to serve Hidden Hills.)

SUPERVISOR POYNER spoke in favor of granting water connections to Hidden Hills.

"The difficulty is that if Cal-Am doesn't supply the water, where is it going to get it?" he asked. "The answer is that Cal-Am must serve these homeowners."

Russel Hansen, secretary-treasurer of the Building and Construction Trades Council of Monterey County and a vice-president of the Foundation for Conservation, spoke against granting Saroyan's proposed modifications in the interim order.

"At least 65 per cent of the building industry would be entirely or partially unemployed by it," he said. "I don't think our community can stand that."

John Jernegan, representing the Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club, reaffirmed that organization's support of the interim order.

Characterizing the proposed modifications designed to "close loopholes" in the interim order as "both practical and fair," Jornegan asked, "Is it true the water consumption is above the safe annual yield estimated by Cal-Am?

"It is abundantly clear the Monterey Peninsula is already in a water shortage situation," he declared. He also said the Ventana Chapter opposes the construction of another dam "so large that it would speed up population increase beyond its already-alarming rate," Jernegan said.

Jean Bleich, representing the Monterey Peninsula League of Women Voters, asked that the P.U.C. "take whatever measures it deems necessary to provide water."

Loren Smith, former county supervisor from the 4th District, said the problem isn't a shortage of water, but a problem of water distribution.

"Monterey County is not water-short from the rainfall standpoint," he said. "The Carmel River flows with 60,000 acre-feet of waste every year, on the average. Monterey County is not water-starved, it's just a matter of getting together and using that water."

Carl Hooper, an engineer with George Bestor and Associates of Monterey, suggested modification "in the other direction," or possible lifting of the interim order.

"The interim order is based on statements by staff persons not necessarily born out by the facts," he said. Hooper said he had been unable to reconcile conflicting testimony given the P.U.C. in hearings to date on the question.

"There is definitely an acute problem approaching us if there is not some new source of water developed," Hooper said.

HOOPER SAID his firm tested several wells in the lower Carmel Valley area for iron concentrations and found one well only one and one-half miles from the ocean with an iron level just 25 per cent above the allowable level.

"As much as 2,000 to 3,000 acre-feet of water could be developed in the area a half-mile in from the ocean by interconnecting smaller wells and using iron treatment plants," Hooper said. "This would take care of the next three to four years of growth.

"With an annual expenditure of $50,000 to $75,000, this well system could keep up with development."

William B. Brown, representing the Carmel Valley Property Owners' Association, supported Saroyan's proposed strengthening of the interim order.

"We feel there would be rank discrimination if the order is not changed," Brown said. "There've been a lot of people who've come in and started to develop if they live on a water main. If, by letting people connect to mains they're already on, we go to water rationing, this would discriminate against all people on the Peninsula."

David R. Pigott, representing Del Monte Properties Co., said "the order of May 31 is premature--there has been no finding that Cal-Am can not supply adequate water."

Hubbard told the hearing examiner Thursday Standex supported the request by the cities and county for the 120-day time extension.

"We disagree that the interim order be continued in effect. We ask recision of the order, or that it be clarified and relaxed to permit normal growth and development of the community," Hubbard said.

"There is no crisis; there is no emergency."

Clayton B. Neil, Jr., Carmel and Monterey engineer, agreed with Hubbard the order should be "rescinded entirely or modified within 30 days.

"There really is no emergency," Neil said. "What is the probability of having three consecutive dry years?"

The P.U.C., in rendering the interim order, said a dry period of several years could mean water shortages to Cal-Am customers, and indicated Cal-Am may already be giving water to the maximum number of customers it can handle without significant new sources of water.

Saroyan said it was improper for opponents of the interim order to attack the commission's May 31 decision.

How to conserve water

With all the controversy over whether or not there is an imminent water shortage on the Monterey Peninsula, residents may want to start their own efforts to conserve water.

Here are a few suggestions from California Public Utilities Commission hearing examiner Parke Boneysteele, made during last week's two days of hearings in Seaside:

-- Detect and repair plumbing leaks, especially in toilets.

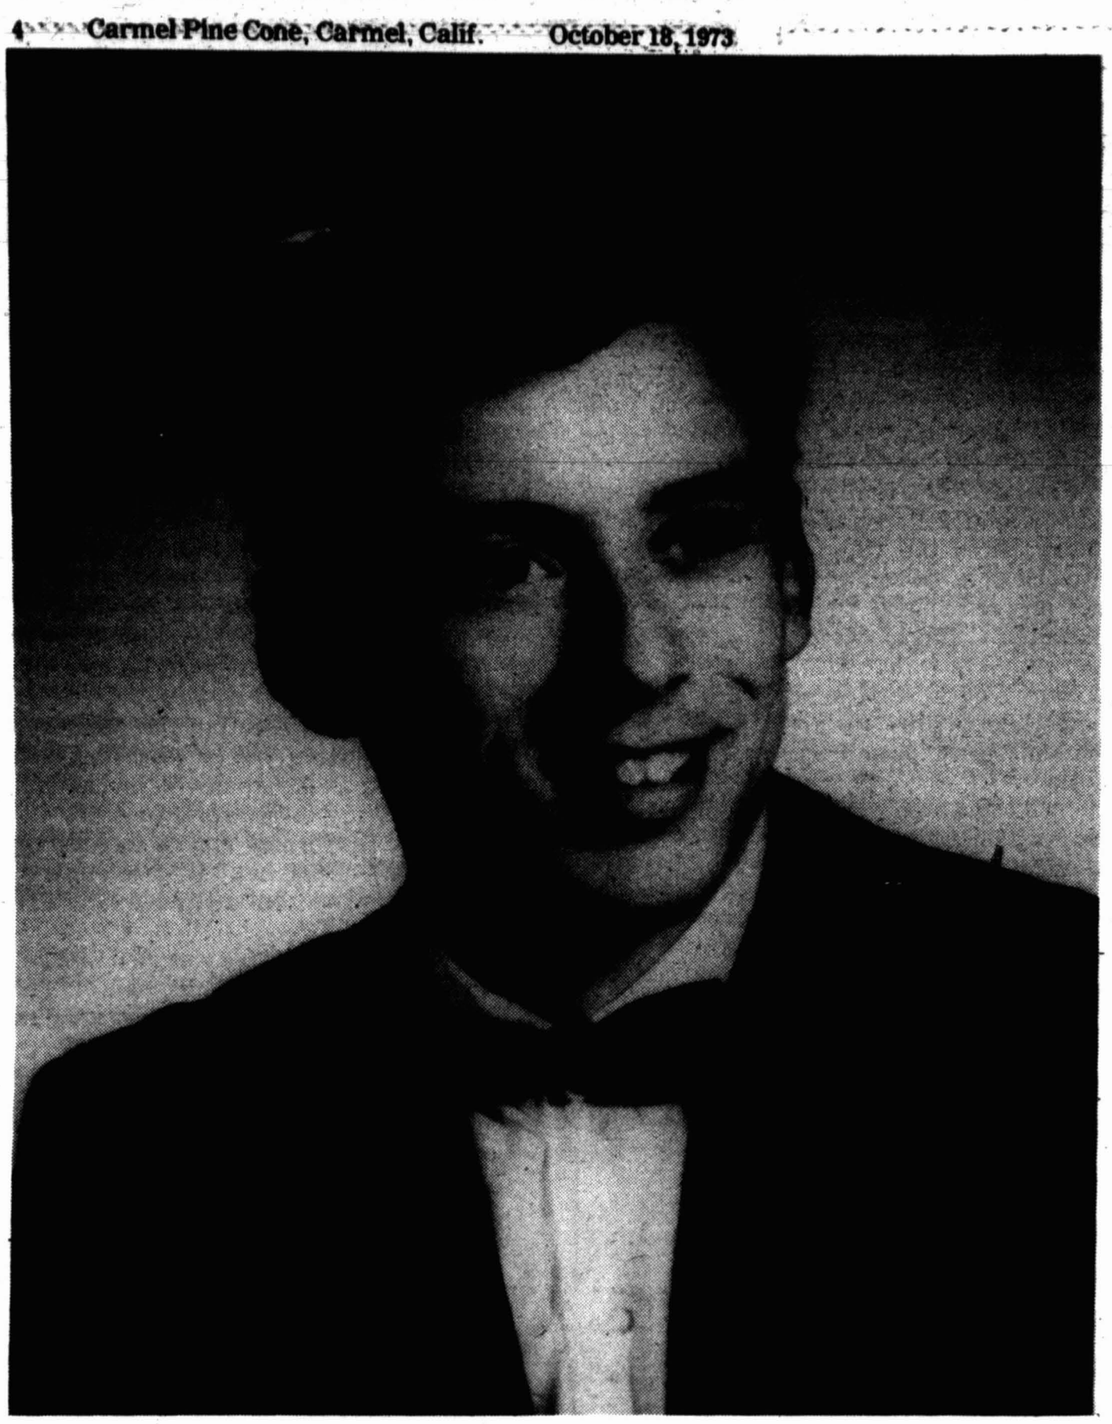
-- Select low water usage plumbing fixtures, such as shower heads and water-consuming appliances.

-- Plant low water demand landscaping plants by using plants native to this area.

-- Start thinking about the possibility of using reclaimed water for irrigation of golf courses.

-- Ask California-American Water Co. to show total gallons of water used on each bill.

-- Identify and work with large water users to reduce consumption.



HARVEY HUSS

Water problem

"You've got to exhaust your administrative remedies, first," he said.

Concerning the proposed tightening of the order, Rosenberg said the effects "would result in economic and social impacts of such a serious nature so as to be almost fatal to the welfare of these communities."

Rosenberg said there are "defects in the foundation upon which the order was formulated," but did not enumerate them.

"There is a calculated risk in that in the cycle of dry years possibly it might become necessary to install rationing." he said. "We don't perceive that would be such a radical change for people in the area.

"I'm violently opposed to a stringent restriction against all but single-family residences."

SAROYAN TORE into the water company for not having produced a promised in-depth outline of available alternatives for providing more water and the means to finance them.

"For six months, the water company has told us they will have a package, a plan for what they will do," he said. "That great big dam--they better get going on. Everything else is just stop-gap."

Loren Smith said Cal-Am "has said in a public meeting that water could be provided for the next two and one-half years without a dam. I'd like to see the water company held to it."

The major serious proposal for increasing water supplies available to Cal-Am is construction of a major new dam on the upper Carmel River.

Most of Friday's hearing was given to a detailed cross-examination of Robert T. Bean, consulting geologist, by staff attorney Saroyan, who questioned figures in a report he did for Standex suggesting adequate water supplies.

Saroyan questioned Bean's methods of gathering information and the fact he relied to some extent on previously-published hydrology studies from, among other sources, the Monterey County Flood Control and Water Conservation District.

Bean said he had only investigated one well in the field in preparing the study for Standex.

Saroyan asked Bean if he agreed with a published report estimating long-term yield of the Carmel Valley underground aquifer at 4,000 to 6,000 acre-feet per year.

"The estimate is too low," Bean replied, adding that his estimate is that the aquifer could produce 15,000 to 18,000 acre feet annually.

ALSO PRESENTED TO THE P.U.C. and taken under submission was a request by Cal-Am to sell a well in the Seaside area to the Seaside Redevelopment Agency. Company representatives said the well has been used in recent years to test for salt water intrusion into the area and does not produce quality water.

Also, the Seaside Redevelopment Agency has threatened condemnation proceedings against Cal-Am to acquire the well, which would not be used but built over.

Highway worker gets heroism award

A young highway maintenance man who lost his life trying to rescue storm-bound motorists received the state's highest civilian award for heroism on Oct. 16.

Gov. Ronald Reagan presented the Medal of Valor to the widow of Harvey Robert Huss who was killed last Feb. 11 in a rock and mud slide on Highway 1 a few miles south of Big Sur.

Mrs. Mary Dasinger Huss accepted the Medal of Valor on behalf of her late husband at a ceremony at the State Capitol. It was the second such posthumous award in the state's history.

Huss had responded to a call for help from a trapped motorist when he and his skip loader were swept nearly to the sea by a huge washout in Lafler Canyon.

Immediate rescue attempts proved too dangerous as long as the slide continued active. Huss's body was not recovered until total reconstruction of the roadway began last month.

Huss was a native of San Luis Obispo, and a Navy veteran of the Vietnam conflict.

Besides his wife, Mary Frances, he leaves a son, Robert; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey H. Huss; a brother, Raymond Huss, and a grandfather, H. E. Waldroupe, all of Salinas. His sister, Mrs. Anita Laywell, lives in Columbus, Ohio.

REMEMBER WHEN?

50 YEARS AGO:

From The Pine Cone, Oct. 20, 1923

IN THE CURRENT issue of the Theater Magazine considerable prominence is given to two of our local writers -- Harry Leon Wilson and Martin A. Flavin.

It is claimed that "Merton of the Movies" is responsible for "a change of spirit, gradual, almost imperceptible, but nonetheless definite, in the vast output of screen production." The critic further asserts that this masterpiece of modern satire struck home with many of the producers and that there is an ever-growing tendency at present among the film people to laugh at themselves, as witness the latest "elaborate and hilarious film, "Hollywood," now being made under the direction of James Cruze.

Martin Flavin's play, "Children of the Moon," is one of the late Broadway successes. Mr. Hornblow, the editor of the Theater Magazine, gently raps the Theater Guild and "all the other theatrical wiseacres who profess to be ever searching the horizon for the long awaited 'great American play' and stoutly asserts that "Children of the Moon" is a better play and a more humanly interesting play than 90 per cent of the loudly trumpeted hits."

Selby C. Oppenheimer, whose annual activities are always the index to the musical season's importance, has, as usual, mapped out a most comprehensive program for the fall, winter and spring of 1923-24 in San Francisco.

Oppenheimer has grouped the artists and attractions that he has booked into three divisions: A series of special events which will be held in the Exposition Auditorium and in various theaters and halls; a special series of popular-priced concerts in the Columbia Theatre on Sunday afternoons; and the Alice Seckels' "Matinee Musicales" series, in the ballroom of the St. Francis Hotel.

25 YEARS AGO:

From The Pine Cone, Oct. 15, 1948

"MY VERSES are as direct as a sock in the eye, and just about as subtle. I write them that way," Don Blanding, "Vagabond Poet," artist, and lecturer, said in Carmel Wednesday over an after-breakfast cup of coffee. During his four-day stay here as a stopover in an autograph tour of California, Don appears tonight at 8 p.m. at Sunset Auditorium in a reading and lecture sponsored by the Carmel Lion's Club.

Don is a big man; he's well over six feet, with broad shoulders. In fact, he looks more like a thoughtful banker than a poet. He came in out of Wednesday's rainstorm wearing an officer's trench coat, a modest gray suit, a hound's tooth checked wool shirt, and an obviously beloved old hat.

"Like the sock in the eye, the kind of poetry I'm trying to write has impact, is a compact, tangible statement, and stays in your mind," he explained. "Or, to put it another way, I write in parables. A parable expresses the intangible through the tangible, in simple, direct language. As a consequence, I don't hope to reach the 'ivory tower' group, the upper 10 per cent of super-intellectuals."

Joining in a nation-wide movement to clear off the newsstands "funny paper" books unfit for juvenile reading, the Carmel P.T.A. and the Junipero Serra Mothers Club this week independently took action toward a cleanup in Carmel.

The Carmel P.T.A., in a meeting Wednesday, passed the following resolution: "That the P.T.A. recommend to the city council that certain books be removed from the local newsstands and that the list of these books be gotten from the State P.T.A."

After further discussion, a second resolution was passed that "prior to taking the matter to the city council we meet with booksellers and other organizations in town" for the purpose of seeing if the clean-up can be accomplished through voluntary co-operation on the part of the newsstand proprietors."

Resolutions of the same purport, but in reverse order were passed by the Junipero Serra Mothers Club at their last meeting. They decided first to ask newsstand proprietors to remove the objectionable books. If this fails, they will go to the city council for legislation to force the issue. But they prefer to accomplish their purpose "in a friendly way with the newsstand operators."

10 YEARS AGO:

From The Pine Cone, Oct. 17, 1963

THE MONTEREY County Symphony orchestra has accelerated its rehearsal schedule this week in preparation for its opening concert which will take place in Sunset Auditorium next Tuesday evening, Oct. 22, at 8:30 p.m.

The traditionally all-orchestral concert will be under the direction of conductor John Gosling. The program will consist of favorite old masters including: Mozart's Overture to the Marriage of Figaro, Handel's Royal Fireworks Music, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5 (The New World).

The performance will also be dedicated to the memory of the late Grace Howden, who founded the Symphony Association in 1946. It was Mrs. Howden's impetus, during the symphony's early, formative years that was primarily responsible for the growth and development of both the orchestra and the symphony association.

The greatest demand for season tickets in the orchestra's history has made the series a virtual sell-out. The few remaining tickets are now on sale at the Browse Around Book Shop in Carmel. Any tickets not sold on a season basis will be put on single sale the day of the concert, and will also be available at the box office immediately preceding the performance.

The possibility of the elimination of the Hastings and Dudley bus runs by Carmel Unified School District was put off for another two weeks at least by the board of education last night.

It had been proposed by school administrative officials that these two runs be eliminated in favor of a program which would see the high school district paying parents for transporting pupils to the nearest bus stop on the regular run. The proposal was brought by cost considerations as related to the scheduling problems, school district sources said.

With the untimely death of Julian P. ("Spike") Graham last Sunday night, the Monterey Peninsula lost its ambassador of friendship whose portraits of notable residents and visitors have carried warm reminders of our Peninsula and Spike's signature around the world.

A photographer of rare sensitivity, Julian Graham stood at the top of his profession. A personality of warmth, sincerity and charm, he had friends of all nationalities and interests.

Resident of the Peninsula for 40 years, Julian Graham will be sorely missed.

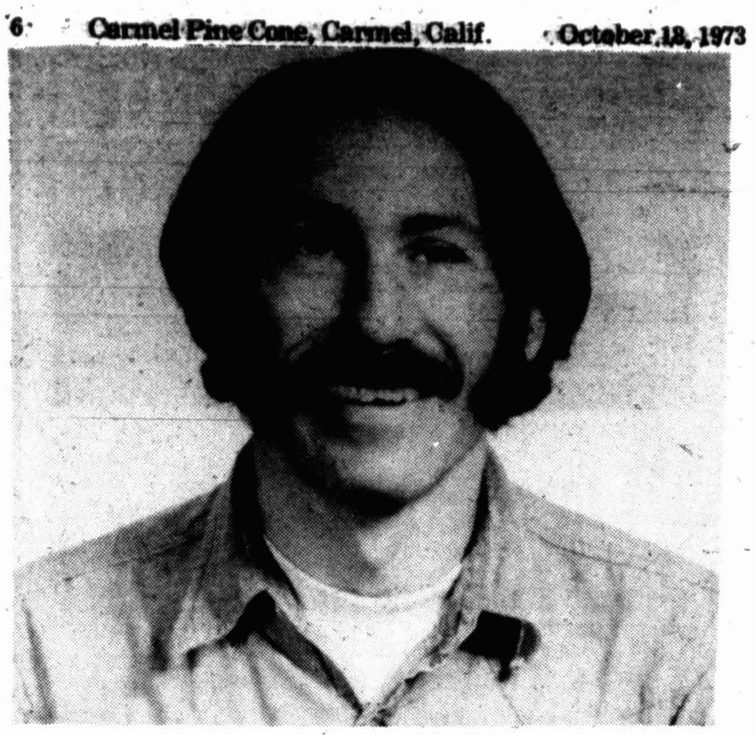
Middle East war, seen by Carmelite



STEVE BARDIN

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a first-hand account of the Middle East war written on Yom Kippur by Steve J. Bardin, a traveling Carmel resident who was caught in Tel Aviv, Israel when fighting recently broke out. He discusses for Pine Cone readers his personal impressions of the conflict.)

By STEVE BARDIN

TEL AVIV, Israel--This morning something was wrong.

For the first time since my stay on the kibbutz, the sky was dark and cloudy, and of course out of deference to this occasion, nothing much moved in the countryside.

Even Charlie, the dog, seemed to act strangely. As events reveal themselves, the clouds are of war, and the darkness, death itself.

Last night two army personnel were called from the diner; later that night our reservists were put on standby. This was unprecedented as reserves are never called on a religious holiday. Some thought it a prank, for which someone would catch hell.

Today, as I write this, the truth unfolds on "The Voice of Peace," our only available English-speaking station. Approximately four months ago, an Israeli businessman invested all his personal fortune in a ship and a radio station and has been broadcasting off the coast of Israel, appealing to both the Arab and Israeli worlds to make peace.

Today, his voice shakes as he comments upon the futility of war, and appeals for mutual understanding and love. All the songs today have to do with war, and its aftermath. Somehow, today their sad implications are only too, too poignant.

In the sky overhead are many planes heading for the Sinai and the Suez where a million men stand poised, and perhaps now are engaged in their dubious trade. Literally thousands of tanks and tens of thousands of troops surround this small country of determined people.

The result, if continued conflict continues, seems predictable--Israel will win.

The apprehension of the otherwise-confident people is "what cost?" One friend or relative often will be too much. After six million, their resiliency is unmeasurable. And though less critical than in 1967, they can not afford one retreat, one lost battle.

News -- 2:30 . . . Egypt bombed Sinai, Israel is now officially at war. How long will it last, what will happen? I'm as safe as anyone can be here on Dorot (although the Jordanian border was only 10 kms away before the 1967 war). I guess it's comforting to be in a non-strategic area. Still, my vicarious curiosity gets the best of me, history is happening, great events are unfolding so near, and yet so far--right now.

Suddenly, a universal sense of war pervades my mind--World War II, Vietnam, here. What it ultimately means is tears, oceans of them, I can see it in the eyes of the women here already, again. This is a German kibbutz; the memories remain, as do the tatoos.

Why? How can people even hurt each others' feelings, let along kill one another? Is anything, can anything be really that important? Damn all flags; there is only one species, as there is only one earth.

More planes, both ways, faster now; one trails smoke but continues, afterburner on. The news tells of Syrian penetration in the Golan Heights and large amounts of armor crossing the Suez. Today Israel will get ready, and try to contain and minimize, but tomorrow shall be quite another day. As I see the handwriting on the wall, by tomorrow, Israel will be ready and quite angry, this time the lesson must be unmistakable, complete, and, God willing, close to permanent.

At last, Cairo and Damascus may be hit. Hussein, so far, has the common sense to stay out of it, for if he fails again, he's finished politically in Jordan.

One of the recurring songs on the radio deals with the righteousness and invincibility of any respective army because they "have God on their side." Starting tomorrow, the world will see whose God's magic is stronger, Jahweh or Allah.

This time, the gods are Phantom vs. MIG, Centurian vs. Stalin, and, ultimately, the men themselves. How unfortunate that war is often the index of achievement of a given culture--too bad that nations can't "compete" with each other in kindness and understanding. I have the feeling that Israel would certainly welcome the possibility, anytime.

Knights, Zulu tribesmen

Youth has diverse collection of lead soldiers

By RICK ROBERTS

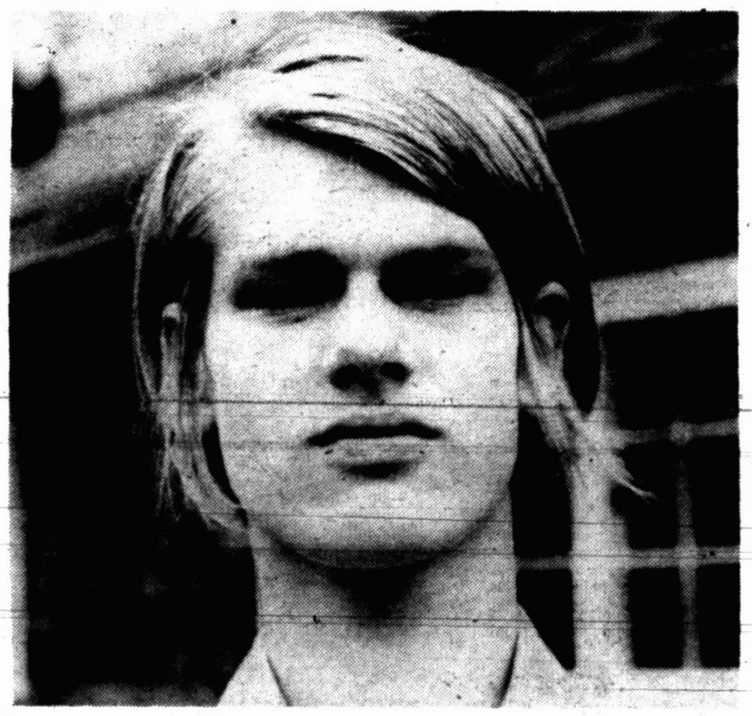
ENGLISH KNIGHTS, Scottish highlanders, and Zulu tribesmen in Pebble Beach?

Yes, but in miniature. These and other lead soldiers, each measuring 54 millimeters high, are in the collection of Glen Meade, a 15-year-old Carmel High School student.

Meade -- a tall boy with straight blonde hair -- has arranged his army of about 140 lead soldiers over several shelves on his bedroom wall.

He has lived on the Peninsula for the past five years, and has been collecting what he calls "military miniatures" since he was 11.

"When I lived in Marin County I bought soldiers in San Francisco, but only for a while," Meade said.



GLEN MEADE

"On a visit to London four years ago, I found a store that had the soldiers I wanted. Then I was able to find a guy who bought the blank figures and painted them himself.

"That's why they cost so much -- the effort involved in painting them is so great. It takes me about eight hours, painting two soldiers at once. This guy in London can paint 12 pieces in that same time.

"He also has no middle man, so I've been able to get soldiers fairly cheap from him," said Meade.

Meade is quick to differentiate the lead figures he owns from toy soldiers.

"Britain did produce lead toy soldiers, but they haven't been made in the last 15 years or so. Laws were passed there that banned toys like that for children. The soldiers are potentially dangerous because the lead is toxic," he said.

Meade said he only had a few lead soldiers of this variety.

"They're not antiques, but they've become extremely rare, probably worth three or four dollars apiece, depending on their condition. Sometimes you can get a good buy at antique stores, from people who don't know the real value of these pieces," said Meade.

But the lead soldiers that he collects are neither toys nor for war games. They have been designed principally for collectors, for display purposes. Produced mostly in England, Germany, and France, they have to be imported.

Familiar names to American collectors are the English "Stradden" and the French "Mignot" brands.

"The military miniatures, what I've got, can be made to many specifications," Meade said.

He showed a catalog advertisement from one company that displayed 50 models to choose from -- riflemen running, firing in prone, sitting, and standing positions, and falling. Historical personalities can also be ordered from these European companies. Figures of Joan of Arc, Richard the Lion-Hearted, Charlemagne, and Lincoln are available, among others.

"You have to expect to pay a lot of money, of course, to have these miniatures made for you," said Meade.

"I guess it is an expensive hobby.

"But I never buy soldiers in the United States. You can find them around here, in Carmel and Monterey, but they cost too much money.

MEADE SAID HE purchased most of his collection in England, which he has visited several times in recent years with his parents.

"This one here," Meade said, pointing to a soldier in red coat, green plaid kilt, and pith helmet, "cost about $6. It would cost at least twice that much, or more, if I bought it here."

Some individual pieces -- mounted knights, or soldiers equipped with cannon or machine gun -- bring prices as high as $40.

"I've even seen some soldiers priced at $50," Meade said, "thought I don't know who would pay that much."

He said he saw no obvious advantage in lead over plastic. Both can be produced with much detail.

"I just like lead better, maybe it has something to do with the weight and the feel," said Meade.

"With lead, you can do about anything you want. For instance, if you want a man smoking a pipe, sitting in a chair, instead of the standing figure, you can remove the legs, melt them into a different position, and then solder them on as well as the chair and the pipe.

"You can't do this with plastic, though I've heard of a new melting process that can be used with plastic soldiers, but I don't really know how successful a method it is. Besides, it's hard enough working with lead," said Meade.

Meade said he never had a definite plan when he began collecting.

"A lot of people concentrate on a certain period, the Napoleonic era is very popular, but I don't specialize. I suppose my collection is haphazard."

The military miniatures that Meade collects are for show, though he said he often stages battles with them. He uses simple backdrops, mostly plastic, and HO train-size scenery. On one bookshelf, Scotch and British soldiers battle in a pine forest, while below, on another shelf, French and English knights clash in the courtyard of a medieval castle. In small groups can be found Zulu warriors, American Indians, Confederate infantry, and Chinese Boxer rebels.

Meade attended a convention of the Wargames Society of North London when he was in England in 1971, but said he found it boring.

These games involve lead and plastic soldiers, and the figures are smaller, with less detail than either the toy or miniature designs.

"It took so long for them to finish their game, about eight to 12 hours. There was no action. It was so slow moving. To get involved in that you have to get really historical about it, with names, dates, geography, and all that.

"They usually recreate famous battles, but the outcome can change," said Meade. Napoleon's forces might win the battle of Waterloo, for example. The man directing these soldiers would have researched Napoleon's defeat, so to avoid past mistakes, he said.

Germany has been producing lead soldiers longer than any other country, for about 150 years, according to Meade.

THESE FIGURES were originally used for war games, though with real explosives, so that they often got damaged. The practice stopped, Meade claimed, because of the expense involved.

WITH JOAN of Arc (holding flag) looking on, knights battle in castle courtyard.

In the last 10 years, interest in collecting lead soldiers has grown in the United States, but the hobby is still more popular in Europe.

A club meets on the first Sunday of every month at the Monterey Library. The group usually shows slides or displays pieces from their collections. But few people on the Peninsula collect lead soldiers, said Meade.

Meade's family has done much traveling so he has had many opportunities to acquire new soldiers. One of his most prized pieces in his collection is a miniature coach, drawn by eight horses.

"It was originally created to commemorate the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II in 1952. This coach sold then for $20," said Meade. His father bought it while traveling in Europe a few years ago, and it is worth considerably more now.

Meade estimated his entire collection, if he had to buy it today, would cost him about $1,500.

"I can't think of any real reason why I collect lead soldiers. I just like the atmosphere they create, I guess. I can't explain it any better than that," he said.

Out on a limb

By GREGORY D'AMBROSIO
Carmel City Forester

THE FIRST RAINS of the year finally fell last week, and to say the least it was needed.

Carmel managed to collect more than one inch, so we started out with a good soaking rain. Seems like all the plants and trees say thank you for the relief, because they all began turning deep shades of green.

With the advent of the first showers, the sign for planting season is just around the corner, so the Forestry Division is now preparing for another successful year of planting more trees to replace the old timers. I've mentioned this in previous stories, but I may as well say it again: the Forestry Division has finally caught up with the number of trees removed over the past 10 years and has been able to plant on request for private owners who desire a tree planted on city property in front of their homes.

This brings to mind an article one of the Forestry Division personnel wrote. Gary Kelly is a member of the crew who recognizes the necessity of having the co-operation of the public in maintaining the newly planted trees. Gary wrote a short request that makes a great deal of sense and also would help stimulate interest by public citizens for the care of the trees.

He wrote: "The planting season is nearly here and once again the city's Forestry Division will be planting about 300 trees. This year we would like the residents of Carmel to join with us in the placement and selection of these newly planted trees. As we all know, most of the residential housing in Carmel has city property adjacent to it. In almost every instance it is impossible to distinguish where private property ends and city property begins. If you have such an area of city property and would like to have a tree or trees planted on it, we would like to help.

"All that we ask in return is that you help us maintain the trees by watering and protecting them from damage while they are still small. By helping us maintain these newly planted trees you would not only be helping to preserve Carmel's forest, but actually enhancing your own property.

"If you are interested in this joint effort please give us a call or write: Gregory D'Ambrosio, City Forester, P.O. Box 4491 or call 624-3543."

THE FORESTRY DIVISION is providing trees on city property throughout the winter season. Species available for planting will be Monterey Pine, Monterey Cypress, Redwood and several other species in limited numbers.

Coinciding with the planting season the crews are hoping to install several center islands in the middle of street areas where trees are now located or were located and had to be removed. The installation of these islands may serve several purposes. The health of those trees that still remain will be improved, the islands will eliminate traffic damage and accidents, traffic speeds should be reduced, and last but not least the retention of the ambling street around the trees will continue the tradition of trees having presidence over streets.

I would like to compliment Robert Miskimon, the editor of the Pine Cone, on his choice of "Out On A Limb" as the title for these articles. Sometimes I have the feeling that the limb is broken.

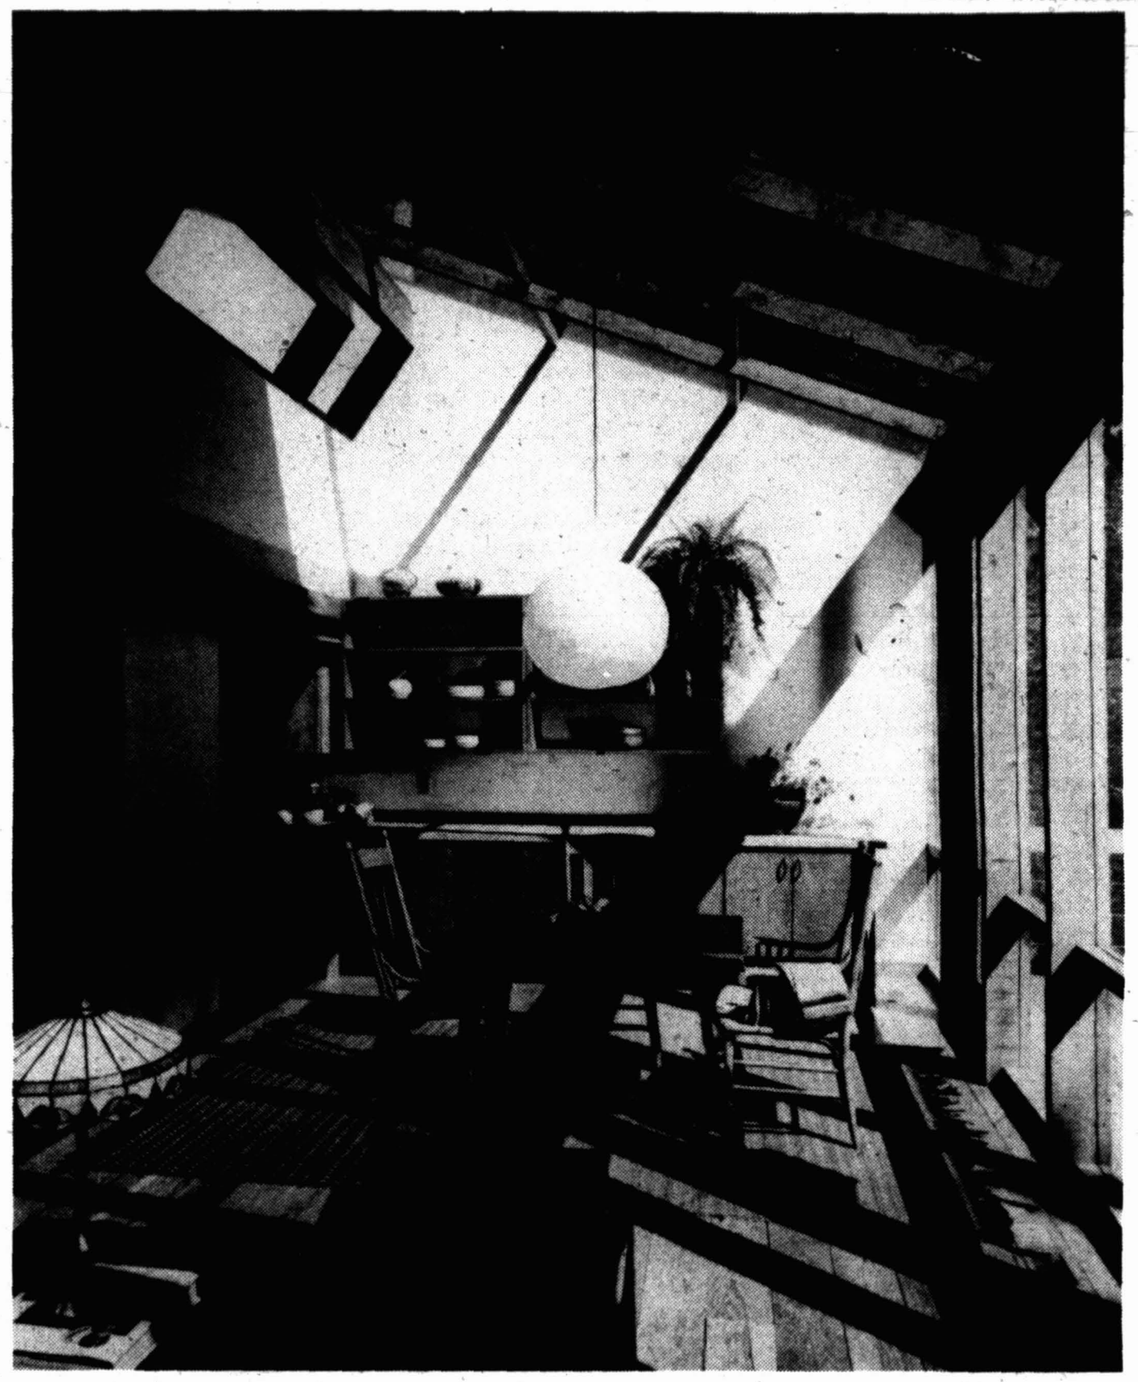
Waldie cancels Carmel appearance

Rep. Jerome Waldie, (D-Antioch), spoke by telephone from Washington, D. C., to a well-attended dinner at Carmel's Sunset Center hosted by the Women's Democratic Club of Monterey County last Thursday.

Slated to be guest of honor, Waldie was unable to attend the dinner because he is a member of the House Judiciary Committee, which met on the same day to consider the resignation of the former Vice-President, Spiro T. Agnew. The dinner guests heard Waldie talk of possible implications and consequences of the resignation.

Though a contender for his party's nomination for governor of California in 1974, Waldie spoke more of the problems of selecting a new vice-president than of his own candidacy for governor. Following Waldie's talk, a drawing was held by members of the Citizens for Waldie Committee. Prizes included bicycles and bicycle equipment to help illustrate Waldie's concern for conservation.

Waldie is also in the midst of a walking tour through California both to meet the public face-to-face and to help illustrate this concern even more strongly. Winners were Minnie Foreman of Guerneville, Helen Pitman of Menlo Park, and Betty Ashadina of Seaside. Proceeds of the drawing went to Waldie's campaign fund.



AN HONOR AWARD went to this pole-framed home in Pebble Beach during the recent 1973-74 AIA-Sunset Western Home Awards program. Architects were Smith & Larsen, Architects and Planners, of Monterey, who designed and built the home within its heavily wooded site without disturbing trees, hillside or drainage.

Parks district to investigate Odello purchase

By RICK ROBERTS

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Regional Parks District Board of Directors created a three-man committee Thursday night, to investigate the problems involved in acquiring the eastern half of the Odello artichoke fields near the mouth of the Carmel River.

Directors John Sigourney and Sean Flavin, and General Manager Gary Tate, will be contacting other local organizations -- OLAF, the Carmel City Council, the Carmel Sanitary District, and the Monterey Peninsula Area Planning Commission -- that have demonstrated interest in the future of the Odello property.

Whether the Regional Parks District has any legal power to buy the land will also be explored, as well as Kansas City developer James Grier's intentions. A contract between his firm and the Odello brothers has been signed concerning the eastern land.

Speakers before the board included Billie Barton, Seaside city councilwoman and chairwoman of the Area Planning Commission, attorney Tom Hudson, and Carmel City Councilman Gunnar Norberg.

They recommended various proposals.

Barton said she was surprised to learn recently that the state would be requiring the money collected by OLAF, and the $100,000 pledged by the City of Carmel, toward the purchase of the western Odello lands. State funds are expected to supply the balance of the $1.8 million.

She said residents have always been concerned about the future of the entire Odello property. Barton urged the board to take immediate action regarding the eastern fields because they have been recently leased to the development firm.

"There seems to be quite a drive by citizens to keep both the east and west property in open space," Barton said.

The land could be used for recreational purposes, effluent disposal, or open space. Any of these options would be preferable to development, she said.

"I'm not sure it can be accomplished. I'm not asking that you allocate money to pick up the lease on the land, but you could help us staff a program that would deal with this issue," said Barton.

Hudson said he appeared before the board "to avert a pending disaster foisted on this community. He outlined the public's many unsuccessful attempts in the past to gain control of the Odello land, and told of the recent contract the Odellos had signed.

Citing this contract, Hudson said: "We in the community are now in the position of having to deal with Grier."

Hudson suggested the Regional Parks District act as an entity to acquire the property as soon as possible.

He also advocated that the entire board, or members of it, meet with the Del Monte Realty Co., the agents for Grier, to negotiate the value of the land.

"The Odellos will cooperate, as long as there is some assurance that they will not be involved in litigation," Hudson said.

"The district should move, and move promptly," he said, "to eliminate this corporate faction."

He suggested that a portion of the Point Lobos slopes and the Fish Ranch slopes should also be preserved from future development.

And he also counseled the district board not to wait on pending litigation that seeks to get the Odello land rezoned. He said it was not worth the time to contest the assessed value of the property.

"What we need tonight is some definitive action," said Hudson.

NORBERG SAID he was not speaking as a representative of Carmel, but on his own behalf.

He suggested that a joint powers agency be established to assume control of the land if it becomes available for purchase. This agency could then be responsible for supervising the property and designating its eventual use, whether it be for artichoke fields, recreational space, or Carmel Sanitary District purposes.

"A joint powers agreement is an alternative that I've been enunciating for a long time," he said.

Norberg said the present litigation is justified because of the "absurdity" created when the Odello property was rezoned for redevelopment purposes. About 600 units could be constructed on the site.

He said the city of Carmel might be willing to put up more than the original $100,000 pledge, but he added that he did not presume to speak for the city on this matter.

Flavin said he did not know what the legal grounds were that might permit the purchase of the lands under such an agency. He could not think of a precedent that would allow such a move.

Sigourney said it was unwise for the board to take any action.

"I feel that we should not get involved in an attempt to solve something not yet decided by the courts," he said.

Director John Lord said that he thought the Regional Parks District was originally formed to act on open space matters like this.

He presented a motion based on Hudson's proposal.

But Director Alice Cantu suggested that this motion be modified and that more research be done concerning the Regional Parks District's legal rights to acquire and direct the future of the property.

Recommendations from OLAF, the Carmel City Council, the Carmel Sanitary District, and the Area Planning Commission must also be considered, she said.

Flavin insisted that this would be the most prudent action to take. The motion passed unanimously. Director Billie Beams was absent.

The committee is expected to report within 30 days on what course of action, if any, the board of directors should undertake regarding the Odellos' eastern land.

The directors agreed they needed more facts before the Regional Parks District could act, in Norberg's words, "in its role as a catalyst."

Autograph party for historical volume planned

John and Regina Hicks will autograph copies of their newest book, "Monterey, A Pictorial History," Oct. 21 from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Eikon Gallery, 470 Alvarado St. in Monterey.

An exhibit of some of the unique historic photographs used in the book will be featured at the Eikon through Nov. 17.

"Monterey, A Pictorial History," a two-color, 64 page publication, compacts 400 years of Monterey history into 7,000 words and 200 photographs. It is the seconed in a series of pictorial histories done by the Hickses, the first being "Cannery Row, A Pictorial History."

The Hickses have spent much of the past 10 years searching through historic photographic collections and files and researching the history of this area. The earliest photograph seen in the book is dated 1853, a mere 14 years after the birth of photography itself; the latest is dated 1973. During the ensuing 120 years, the life and times of the Monterenos in the old Pacific capitol city makes exciting reading and viewing. Its documentation is enriched by those, famous and infamous, who basked in Monterey's placid sunshine, walked its dusty, twisting streets or practiced the regular pastime of "girl watching" from any one of a dozen vantage points.

The quality of many of these early photographs result from prints made by the Hickses from original antique glass negatives made at the turn of the century by J.K. Oliver, owner and proprietor of Oliver's Art Emporium on Old Alvarado Street across from the Custom House. His store was the center of Bohemian talent and for people of culture in the 1890's. His son, Myron, continued the tradition of the store and was also an artist with his camera. He captured Monterey in its heyday and helped preserve much of the city's historic beauty. To these two men, John and Reginia Hicks have dedicated this book on Monterey.

The public is invited to attend the opening of an exhibit and autograph party on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 21, 3 p.m. to 5 p.m., to enjoy this collection of rare old photographs and the Hickses unusual look into Monterey's past.

The Hickses are currently working on the third in this pictorial series which will include Carmel, Carmel Highlands, Carmel Valley and Big Sur. Their many credits include publication of a book of their own photographs called, "Conceptography," exhibits at the Berkeley Art Center, Friends of Photography, Monterey Peninsula College, the Pacific Grove Art Center, the Tantamount Theater, the Nye Gallery, the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, and the Eikon Gallery. They are currently planning an exhibit for the National Gallery of Fine Arts in Washington, D.C. Together they have illustrated many psychology textbooks and John Hicks is the author of both fiction and non-fiction works.

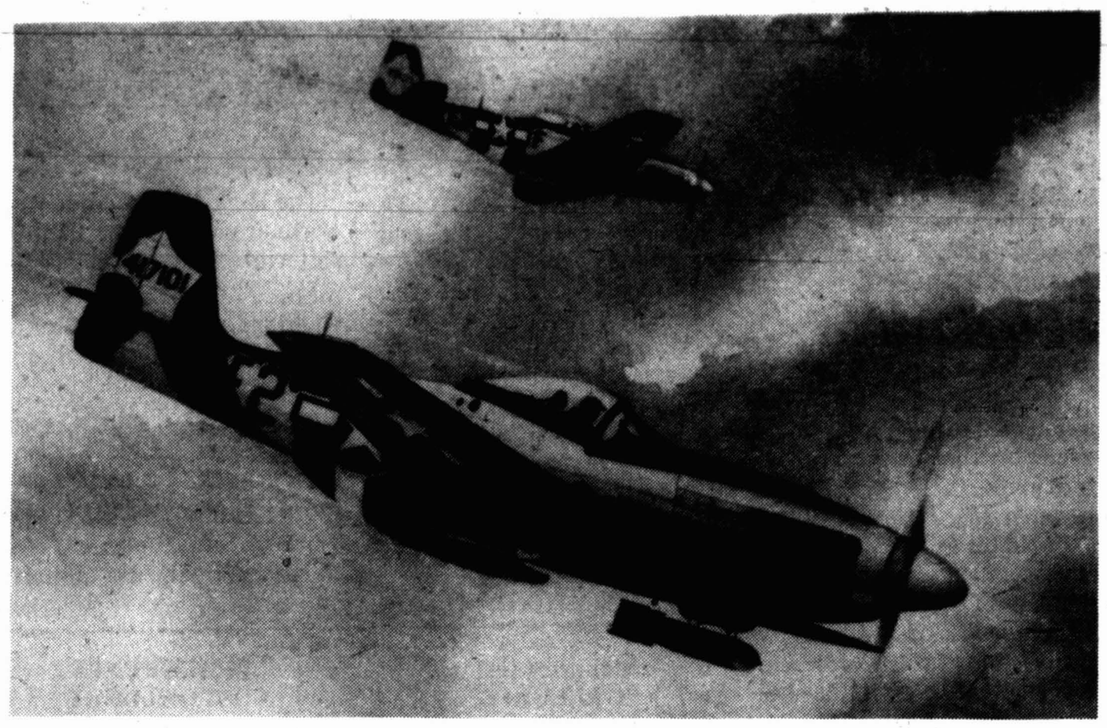
BIPLANES and triplanes in a dogfight bring this canvas by Alfred Owles to life.



WORLD WAR II vintage fighter planes zoom overhead.

Alfred Owles exhibits at Erika's Gallery

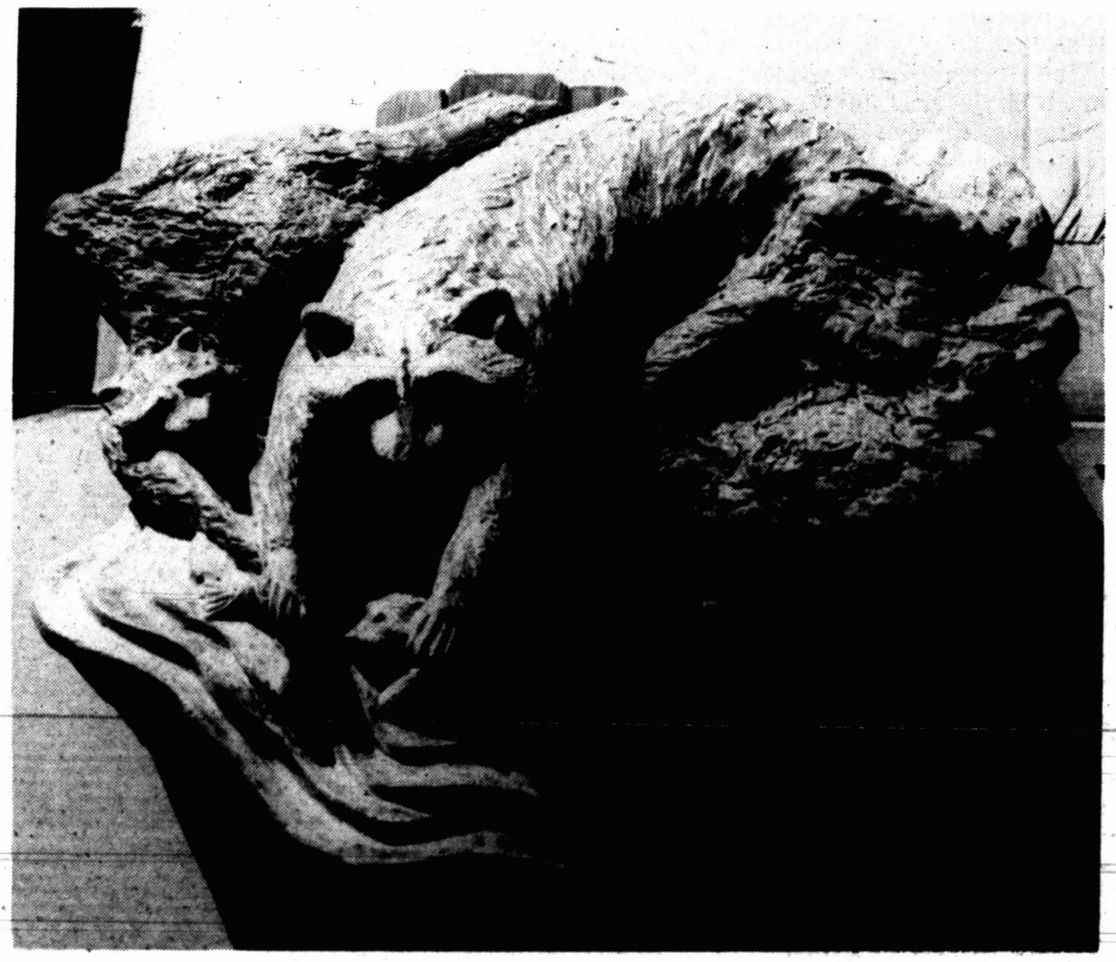
Erika's Gallery in Carmel is now presenting the works of Alfred Owles, a representational painter who works mostly in watercolor.

Owles was born in England, and received his formal art training at the Nottingham Academy of Fine Art where he won a scholarship.

He took his first position as a designer for one of several lace curtain manufacturers known to be there. He later emigrated to America where he became a citizen by joining the U.S. Army Air Corps and became a World War I aviator.

During World War II, magazines such as Look, Life, Collier's and Aviation magazines employed him to illustrate planes that were still in the blueprint stage. His present "meticulous" attention to detail in each painting of airplanes--both old and new--is said to make them "valuable historically."

Owles says "a painting should give you a happy feeling--you should want to be there." The Creative Art Association of America has commented that "the gentility and quietude of his landscapes and water scenes, and the excitement of his active aviation paintings greatly succeed in achieving this feeling."



ARTIST Harry Futoran will show this as well as other sculpted pieces at Fitzgerald's Gallery of Fine Arts, Pacific Grove, on Oct. 20.

Champagne reception for Futoran

A champagne reception-preview of the works of Seena and Harry Futoran is scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 20 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., at the Fitzgerald's Gallery of Fine Arts in Pacific Grove.

Harry's sculpture has been exhibited at the Los Angeles County Museum, Long Beach Museum, the La Jolla Art Museum, and the Palos Verdes Art Association. He had his formal education in sculpture at University of California, Long Beach, and is now represented by the Ryder Gallery, Los Angeles.

Seena's paintings deal with the subject of ecology and flora. Her subjects are said to be "beautifully unusual and brilliant."

Both husband and wife are art teachers in the Long Beach area.

art and artists

LOUISE BOYER'S painting of a farmhouse in Mallorca, Spain is one of the works now on display at the Carmel Art Association.

Sculptures demonstrate variety

The sculpture on display in all galleries of the Carmel Art Association this month is proof that there is as much variety in this medium as is shown in the two-dimensional painting exhibits.

Among the active sculptor-members of the Association is Fritz Abplanalp, who finds his expression in working with wood. His massive and impressive "Eagle" is carved from redwood, while his "Nymph" conforms to the natural lines of an interesting old log, and "Alert" is a seabird of rosewood, perched on a piece of driftwood.

In contrast are the shining white dirilite carvings of Bert Conaghan, who shows two charming animal sculptures, "Chipmunk" and "Ho-Hum," and "Founding Father," a head in marble.

Beth Garcia's works are always small jewels, but she has outdone herself this month with "Polar Bear Scouting," a small bear of elephant ivory with sapphire eyes prowling over a glistening iceberg of selenite. On another plane are the ceramic sculptures of Isabel Tavernetti, with her "Stele" and "Fertility Temple," and "Monolith" a sculpture in brass by Ken Wiese.

Also by this versatile artist are an alabaster piece, "Grace," and "High Note of Joy" in onyx. Don Morrill is represented by a metal sculpture titled "Owl" which, when contrasted with Robert Hoge's "Owl" executed in durastone, shows the wide variations there can be in the interpretation of one theme. Also by Robert Hoge is "Dolphins at Play" in which bronze comes to life as his dolphins dance over the water.

The galleries of the Carmel Art Association are open to the public every day between the hours of 11 a.m. and 5 p.m., on Dolores Street.

'Winter in Mexico' gives a wide panorama

"Winter in Mexico," the first in a series of 8 films presented by Explorama, was screened to a packed house last Friday night at the Sunset Auditorium in Carmel.

Both photography and subject matter were beautiful, but unfortunately the presentation was marred by the in-person commentary by the film's producers.

Lisa Chickering and Jeanne Porterfield are lecturers for the National Geographic -- and should know better -- but both their deliveries were cutesy, hammy and stilted, and ultimately distracted, rather than added, to the film's content.

However, when the two ladies stuck to facts, leaving out coy, "in" references to women's lib and the like, the film was a fascinating journey into Mexico and its people. More importantly, "Winter in Mexico" achieved the goal all travelogues strive for: creating a desire within the viewer to visit the country for himself.

Thorough and all-encompassing, the film, two years in the making, covered more than 20 towns, cities and ruins, and dealt with such diversified subjects as people-watching in Acapulco, fledgling as well as established artists, the Mayan ruins, blessing of the animals in Taxco, and the urban commercialism of Mexico City compared to quiet, secluded fishing villages untouched through the centuries by change and progress.

Much of Mexico seems sadly geared toward the tourist trade, as evidenced by the many swank, posh resorts that crowd the country's beaches. As Miss Porterfield noted, if a town hasn't been reached by real estate land developers, it soon will be.

Bullfights, the cruelest of cruel sports, were covered only briefly and very quickly. Shot in speeded-up motion and to the tune of "The Flight of the Bumblebee," this was an attempt to cover the event and at the same time offend as few animal lovers as possible.

One aspect of the film concerned Americans who have migrated to Mexico, lured by the balmy climate and cheap labor.

World travel is fun and exciting, even if it has to be done vicariously, through the motion picture. The Explorama series at the Sunset continues through May, with visits to Scotland, Turkey, England, Yugoslavia, Argentina, Hawaii and Austria. For reservations and information, write Explorama, 609 Sutter St., San Francisco 94102, or phone (415) 771-4733.

Bus trip to opera offered at MPC

The San Francisco Opera Company is presenting a performance of the opera classic "La Traviata" Wednesday, Nov. 7, and Monterey Peninsula College has scheduled a second bus excursion for the evening performance.

Gerald Adams, opera critic from the San Francisco Chronicle, will give a lecture presentation prior to the trip in order to guide participants into the "World of Opera."

"La Traviata" (The Strayed One), written by Giuseppe Verdi, was first presented in Venice, Italy, in 1853. The story is of a beautiful woman, Violetta, suffering from a fatal illness, who meets a young, distinguished gentleman, Alfredo, and both go off to the country to live. Violetta's father asks her to come back to save the family name from scandal, but Alfredo is not told the full story until too late.

Reserve tickets for the trip are limited, and are on a "first come, first served" basis. The deadline for ticket purchases is Oct. 26.

Tickets are $25 and include a reserved orchestra seat, the lecture by Adams, and round trip bus transportation to the opera.

For more information, contact the Community Services Office at 375-9821, ext. 335.

Scouts attract new memberships

With registrations still coming in, the Peninsula District of the Monterey Bay Area Council of the Boy Scouts has announced that 366 new members have enrolled in scouting programs.

District Executive Charles Hull said most of the members were Cub Scouts--254 boys. New Boy Scouts number 65 and there were 47 new adult members.

The annual roundup of scout members began Sept. 26 with the annual "Back to School Night for Scouting" which was held at nearly 30 elementary junior high schools in the Peninsula.

Hull said the newly recruited youths will bring troop strengths to 1,986 boys. This figure is a little short of the projected goal of 2,171 youths, said Hull, but prospective scouts may register through December. With the new enrollments there are now 1,191 cub scouts and 795 boy scouts within 60 working scout units.

For more information on scouting programs contact Hull at 422-5338.

'Beginning Ballet' now available

"Beginning Ballet" is the title of a new workshop being offered by the Monterey Peninsula College on Wednesday nights beginning Oct. 17 from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. in the MP Dance Studio.

Pamela S. Leighton, who has been a full time teacher for seven years at the Marguerite Phares School of Dancing in Sacramento, will teach the class which will include basic ballet warm-up exercises at the bar and continue with center floor work, the basic posture, the five positions of the feet and arms, eight positions of the body, an understanding of aesthetic line and various steps and combinations. Emphasis will be placed on gaining balance and control of the body through clean classical technique.

The registration fee for the 10-week course is $12. For more information call the Community Services Office at 375-9821, ext. 335.

Folk dancing

A weekly folk dancing class begins on Oct. 18, from 7:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., at All Saints' Episcopal Church, 9th Avenue, between Dolores and Lincoln Streets, in Carmel.

Balkan and Near East dances will be featured. Marc Davey is the instructor. The first half of each session will be devoted to teaching. The remainder of the evening will consist of open dancing.

These are beginning and intermediate classes that will be held every Thursday. Admission is 25 cents.

Auditions start for 'Glass Menagerie'

The Community Theatre of the Monterey Peninsula announces auditions for "The Glass Menagerie," by Tennessee Williams.

The second production of its season by the Community Theatre at the Pacific Grove Art Center will open Nov. 16 and will run for three weekends. One of the great plays of modern American theatre, "The Glass Menagerie" is a drama of great tenderness, charm and beauty, calling for one woman in her 50s, one woman in her late 20s or early 30s, and two men in their late 20s or early 30s.

The play concerns Amanda Wingfield, a faded remnant of the old South who lives in genteel poverty in a St. Louis apartment with her son, Tom, and her daughter, Laura. She tries to give meaning and direction to her life and the lives of her children. But her methods are ineffective and often irritating as they are based on the experiences of another era that no longer apply in modern life.

Director Robert Heater will hold auditions in the Main Gallery of the Pacific Grove Art Center, 568 Lighthouse Ave., Sunday, Oct. 21, at 2:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., and Monday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 p.m. All roles are open.

For further information, or auditions by appointment, please call the director at 624-2669 or 624-7652.

Evening counseling announced

Evening counseling and a class for "Students Waiting to Enroll" are two resources now available at Monterey Peninsula College.

Evening counseling is available two evenings per week by making an appointment with an evening school counselor who will be available to discuss college careers or training in technical vocational field.

Personal Dev. 680, a class for "Students Waiting to Enroll," is offered for students who wish to enroll at MPC either full or part time but were unable to do so at the start of the semester.

The course provides students with an opportunity to become acquainted with the college and helps them to prepare for the upcoming semester, or for enrollment in some of the drop-in, short-term classes offered by the college.

For more information call 375-9821, ext. 217.

Jazz concert tomorrow at MPC

Composer-arranger and pianist George Duke is the featured artist in a jazz concert by the George Duke Trio at 8:15 p.m. tomorrow in the Monterey Peninsula College Music Hall.

Duke, former keyboarder for the Mothers of Invention, is giving numerous jazz workshops and concerts throught California. He has been described as "an exciting young pianist who has achieved a mastery of his instrument that allows him the freedom to fully express some refreshing new ideas in music, and has developed an important new voice for contemporary improvisatory music."

Duke has toured extensively and recorded with Don Ellis, Bobby Hutcherson, John Handy, Lalo Schifrin, Quincy Jones, Dizzy Gillespie and many other top name artists. He has also played in the 1969 Monterey Jazz Festival.

Admission to the concert is $1.50.

Circle Theatre broadens its scope this season

Carmel's Circle Theatre intends to present a broader scope of plays this season than ever before.

"Instead of presenting only contemporary plays, we hope to establish a balanced, simultaneous program that offers contemporary drama and legitimate theater," said Kasey Crosby, an actor-director for the Theatre.

The Theatre will be presenting mime and experimental work as well as musical comedy.

The new season opens on tomorrow with the showing of Jules Feiffer's political satire "The White House Murder Case." There will be three performances that weekend, and four the following week. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

Three other plays are also currently in production: "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "The Intruders," and "Sing to Me Through Open Windows." Auditions have already begun.

Crosby said all those involved with the Theatre would eventually like to create a professional repertory company, by developing talent in the shows they present and in a series of Theatre sponsored workshops.

These workshops begin this week at the Circle Theater. They will be held Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

The Monday sessions will include improvisational work, and timing factors. Mime and body movement, working without props, and the communication of ideas through various forms of dance will be offered on Tuesdays. Wednesday classes will concentrate on acting technique and special exercises.

"We want to reach a lot of people," Crosby said. The charge for each workshop is $1.

He is also giving private lessons at his Carmel residence.

The Circle Theatre is a non-profit organization. It receives the bulk of its financial support from ticket sales, but lack of money has been a problem lately. The Theatre is now looking for donations, to improve the lighting system, to make small repairs on the building, and to support their crowded calendar of performances.

Any success the Theatre has achieved has been accomplished on little money and "much devoted participation," said Crosby.

"It takes a great investment of time and money to produce quality work," he said.

"We want to present to the community high quality theater: comedy, drama, and contemporary plays.

"Contemporary theater has to be superbly done to hold an audience's attention, that's why we're going to work this season to present a variety of plays," said Crosby.

He said the Theatre should then become more popular.

Crosby said he has talked to many theater people on the Peninsula and they seemed to agree with him that a new emphasis is needed.

Crosby has worked with the Pasadena Playhouse and "The Committee" in Los Angeles. He has also studied at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

For the last few years he has been involved in directing and technical work for a Denver theater group.

Having been here about two weeks, he said he is very optimistic about the future of the Circle Theatre because "the Peninsula has many fine arts-oriented people."

He said he was confident that the community would give the Theatre's new program much support.

Anyone interested in auditioning, or in the workshops, should contact Crosby at the Circle Theater in Carmel (624-9823).

Ancient music to be performed

Carl Dolmetsch and Joseph Saxby will appear in concert for one evening in the Monterey Peninsula College Music Hall, marking their 17th American tour which features ancient music and musical instruments.

They will play at 8 p.m. Saturday in the MPC Music Hall.

Dolmetsch has been referred to as probably "the greatest recorder player of all time." Son of the celebrated Arnold Dolmetsch, he gives upwards of 150 concerts, broadcasts, and lecture recitals in many parts of the world every year. His talent with the recorder and harpsichord has brought him in concert before the English royalty on more than one occasion.

Joseph Saxby ranks as "one of the finest and most experienced harpsichordists of all time." He toured the United States at the age of 15 as an accompanist to his father, violinist Michael Zacharewitsch. Saxby is an honorary fellow of the London College of Music.

Sunset views:

Ballet Forklorico tonight

By FRANK H. RILEY, director
Community and Cultural Activities

A SPECIAL TREAT is available at Sunset Center Theatre tonight.

By one of those strange sequences of events that produce suddenly delightful results, the Ballet Folklorico Mexicano, sponsored by the Mexican National Tourist Council, which played last week at the Veterans' Memorial Auditorium in San Francisco, found that they had an extra day in their schedule and decided to perform here in Carmel.

We are given to understand that the large company (a cast of 75!) puts on an excellent show. Curtain time is 8:15 p.m. tonight--get tickets at the door. There will be only one performance in Carmel.

I might remind you that on nights like this when there is any sort of program in the Sunset Center Theatre we open the Marjorie Evans Gallery one hour before curtain time. This gives you an opportunity to see whatever exhibit is on display and also provides easy access for the North parking lot to the theatre. If a daytime visit to the gallery is not convenient, take advantage of these evening openings.

The current show in the Marjorie Evans Gallery is a collection of 40 prints by a group of young African artists. The exhibit has been collected and is toured throughout the United States by the Smithsonian Institute. It will be on display only one more day since it is due to leave Carmel on Oct. 2.

At the same time, we have a new and unusual exhibit in our theatre foyer. It has been assembled and hung by "Alternative Directions" which is a group of women artists with headquarters in one of the Sunset Center studios. Quite a number of artists are represented and you will be surprised by the wide variety of works on display. It's a fun show as well as a handsome one.

Those of you who have been coming to our Tuesday noontime movies know that we have had some delivery problems and so have had to make some substitutions in our programming. However, we have always managed to present an interesting program. A trip to San Francisco this last week has, I believe, solved our problems; and so we can predict with fair accuracy what you will be seeing from here on out.

We will announce each week the following week's films. We hope you will plan to attend. Admission is free; if you want to eat your lunch while you watch, you are welcome to do so. Most folks find it a nice variation to what sometimes becomes a rather dull part of the day.

Please note that because of the holiday, Sunset Center will be closed for the three-day weekend Saturday, Sunday, Monday - Oct. 20, 21, 22. All the Monday classes will resume at regular times on Oct. 29.

Discussion of grant writing is tonight

Iowa legislator Richard Byerly and Graham Watt, federal director of revenue in Washington, D.C. are the next two speakers in a Monterey Peninsula College course on "Grantsmanship and Resource Development."

Dr. Byerly will speak on "Grant Writing" at 6:30 p.m. today in Lecture Forum 102.

Watt's topic is "The Philosophy of Revenue Sharing and Its Practical Applications at the Local Level" on Wednesday, Oct. 24.

TEACHER of meditation Betty Bethards comes to lecture at Sunset Auditorim on Oct. 19.

Dr. Byerly has written grants for Model Cities programs, facilities, research, exemplary programs, career, juvenile corrections, equipment, law enforcement, drug education programs, child care, education volunteer grants and other projects and programs.

He was elected to the Iowa State Legislature earlier this year and he is also director for research and development for the Des Moines Area Community College.

Watt has served as the director of the newly-enacted program for general revenue sharing under which more than $30 billion of federal funds is being shared with more than 40,000 states, counties, cities and other local jurisdictions.

He began his career in city administration in 1958 and earned a national reputation for his ability to handle urban problems. In 1969 he was appointed deputy mayor of the nation's capital by President Nixon.

THE MUSIC CORNER

By IRVING W. GREENBERG

WITH THE lyrical and entrancing music of the Wagner Overture to the opera Tannhaeuser, the Monterey County Symphony Orchestra under the compelling direction of Maestro Haymo Taeuber opened the first concert of the season last weekend.

In addition to this Overture, the program also included the Bela Bartok Piano Concerto No. 3, with soloist Nina Sapievsky, and the Beethoven Symphony No. 6 in F ("Pastorale").

In listening to the Tannhaeuser Overture, this reviewer was struck by the ineffable musical exposition of the "Pilgrim's Chorus," by the excellent performance of the woodwind and brass choirs, and by the accentuated and definitive playing by the viola section of the bacchanalian strains of the Venusberg music. The triumphant song of the protagonist was projected in an expository and climactic orchestral display. The elaborate decorations and ornamentations of the strings in the finale, with the "Pilgrim's Chorus" again in the forefront, gave to the performance of the Overture a totality of programmatic intensity and cohesion. This work was an excellent choice as an orchestral war-horse for the opening concert.

The Bela Bartok Third Piano Concerto, with Nina Sapievsky as the keyboard soloist, belongs to that last year of the composer's life when he knew he was mortally ill. It was intended as a legacy for his wife, as well as a fitting testimonial for both. Almost at the very beginning of the concerto, the soloist entered and immediately established the mood of strong emotion that characterizes this piece.

Although written in the modern idiom, it is filled with a classical meditative lyricism, which the pianism of Miss Sapievsky established in rapport with the orchestral timbre. This young soloist has a good technique, with fine dynamics and clarity of concept. Her phrasing, at times a little off, was nevertheless accurately developed and her judicious use of the pedal added a dimension of good and accurate projection. The luminous, atmospheric and tender second section was conceived in an introspective manner, with a stately note, with the pianist performing the chorale section with persuasive lyricism.

In the finale, the scherzo-like, complex fugue was played with transparency and grace, emphasizing the Hungarian master's final stylistic vivacity and rhythmic contrapuntalism. The orchestra cooperated nobly, following with exactitude the crisp, sparse beat of the maestro.

The Beethoven Symphony No. 6 in F, the so-called "Pastorale," is a work filled with the joy of nature in calm and violence. Maestro Taeuber gave a reading of this piece that had substance and solidity, with a lightness of conception and exposition that made it a joy.

The programmatic material was projected with forceful and varied attenuation, and with excellent balance and moodal changes, bringing out the descriptive expressions of feeling of the various pastoral scenes, indicated by Beethoven himself, in his absorptive love of nature.

With the opening of the first adagio movement, there was established an excellent rapport between orchestra and the conductor. The orchestral choirs were again in complete harmony in their evaluation and exposition of the lyrical andante.

There was a fine distinction displayed of the thematic material in its structural and architectonic implications. The quality of the tonal response was most engaging. The simulation of the various bird calls was achieved musically by the fine playing of the flute, clarinet, and oboe. The storm sequence in the allegro was displayed with good chordal texture in the kettledrums, and in the aggressive invocation by the trombones. The climactic final allegretto, opening with a magnificent introductory passage by the clarinet, and leading to the almost religious hymnal song of thanksgiving, brought to a close by the crashing chords of trumpets and trombones, gave to the performance distinctive tonal coloration of orchestral manifestation.

Preceding the actual concert itself, there were introductory remarks by Ed Gallway, the president of the symphony, in which he described the various activities of the orchestra in its new season, indicating the extension of its activities in programming concerts in areas of the county where live orchestral performances have not previously penetrated. Also, the president of the Symphony Guild presented Gallway with a check representing roughly one-third of its budget, this being the contribution of this auxiliary organization for the past year.

Recent recordings:

ANGEL HAS released a stereo recording of the complete ballet score of Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet (three-discs SC-3802), with Andre Previn conducting the London Symphony Orchestra.

Of the major composers that have taken Shakespeare's tragedy as a basis for composition--(Tchaikovsky, Berlioz, Bellini, Guonod)--unquestionably Prokofiev's is one of the most inspired, not only because it is in the modern idiom, but because, in spite of this contradiction, it still remains one of the most classical and lyrical works.

Prokofiev considered the score a narrative dance-drama for the ballet, fashioned to the needs of this medium, but achieving much greater scope in tracing the course of the tragedy, and in expressing the developing feelings and personalities of the characters. Its lyrical inventiveness and formal organization have made it the most successful three-act ballet score since Tchaikovsky.

In its final published form, the music for Romeo and Juliet consists of 52 numbers grouped into three acts, and characterized by an almost operatic weight of emotional expression and illustration of incident.

It lays a firm basis of musical strife against which the love-tragedy develops, and evokes the idea of a force of destiny that shapes the dramatic events. Juliet's awakening from shy girlhood to compulsive passion is depicted in the interplay of melodic themes; and Romeo also attains musical maturity from an impetuous youth to ardent lover and fierce, bitter fighter. The other characters, in general, are delineated in music that is static.

The Italian setting for the drama is only reflected in the composer's introduction of mandolins in two of the dances, and in a suggestion of a tarantella rhythm for the "folk dance" that begins in Act II.

He makes use of an association of themes with characters or emotions (leitmotivs) but not very rigidly; the thematic allusions are flexibly varied. By varying the weight of the orchestral texture and coloration, the contrast is drawn between indoor and outdoor scenes. Permanent themes are repeated rather than developed in the symphonic sense, but they are worked into the orchestral fabric so skillfully that they sustain and enrich the dramatic narrative. Throughout, there are recognizable snatches from previous Prokofiev's works--Peter and the Wolf--The Classical Symphony--The Flaming Angel, etc.

By giving the score an evocative and atmospheric reading, Previn has furnished substance to the fantasy sequences of the ballet, depicting not only the physical action, but also exposing a psychological insight into the mental processes of the protagonists. He has conceived his interpretation in the somber nature of the drama, but has injected life, color, and vivacity, balancing the brooding morbidity. The various motivs for the characters are identifiable in musical terminology, the love motivs being the ones used most extensively and most elaborately. Previn has emphasized and elaborated these motivs by the careful and opulent reading of the score. He has most artfully expressed the lyrical, almost sensuous, nature of the work by his contrasting non-evocative themes with the harmonic and rhythmic ones. He has succeeded, by means of his expert tonal relationships, in delineating the festive aspects of the music in an imaginative and colorful manner.

By the clarity of its performance, by the brilliant phrasing and dynamic coloration, by its responsive and devoted execution, the London Symphony Orchestra has given to this "symphonic-dramatic narrative" an imaginative and sympathetic utterance.

Although, in general, the surfaces were bright and clear, in the under review there was one side that was scratchy, and another that was warped.

This Angel set is highly recommended. Compared with another recording of the same complete work issued on another label almost at the same time, it holds its own, and, at times, is superior, both from the point of view of the physical recording as well as the nature of the musical interpretation.

Carmel Music Society enters its 47th season

By RICK ROBERTS

THE CARMEL Music Society celebrates its 47th season this year with a series of five concerts scheduled for November through mid-April at Carmel's Sunset Center.

The annual event will be preceeded by the "Fall-de-Rol" -- a party for season ticket subscribers -- on Oct. 26.

Among the artists appearing this season are the young European pianist Christoph Eschenbach and a duo, pianist Gary Graffman and cellist Leonard Rose, both accomplished musicians who have played with the world's major orchestras.

Samson Knoll, acting president of the society, while president Angie Machado is on vacation, said "the purpose of the society ever since it was founded in 1927 has been to bring outstanding talent to Carmel, the community, and music lovers in general."

The people in the society have good judgment and professional standards, said Knoll.

Most of the members on the booking committee and the governing board have either had semi-professional training, are talented amateur musicians, or have performed professionally.

The society, which has about 550 members, is a private, non-profit organization. Besides membership subscriptions, it receives support from donations, private endowments, and legacies.

"Of course, we draw support from Pacific Grove, Monterey, and Salinas, as well as other areas," Knoll said.

Though many people are interested in good music on the Peninsula, the same small group of people often works for more than one of several local music oriented groups.

Knoll, who is academic vice president and dean of the faculty at the Monterey Institute of Foreign Studies, has also worked on behalf of the Chamber Music Society and the Bach Festival Committee.

Despite the decline in competition between these groups, the Carmel Music Society is considering more promotional activities, said Knoll.

"Because the society is such an old, established organization, we have tended not to take publicity as seriously as we probably should have. The society and its members may have to become more visible," he said.

The society is also interested in more life memberships.

These large donations are most helpful in paying for the one or two famous artists that usually appear each season and fill the auditorium.

With large endowments, the society can afford the more expensive and talented artists, though there are good artists who do not demand large fees, Knoll was quick to state.

Music society

"Outstanding artists are becoming increasingly expensive. One concert takes a large portion of our budget," Knoll said.

Arranging an available date for a performer can also be a problem.

Another concern of the society is the lack of younger members on the booking committee and governing board.

"Many young people are either not experienced or are totally wrapped up in their own professional careers," Knoll explained.

"We've made an effort to look for younger people to join the decision-making committees, but this has met with little success.

"The inherent difficulty in a program like this is that you come to rely on people who have been involved in the society for a long time.

"We've always relied heavily on volunteer help. One of the things we have done lately is allow members to donate season tickets that they have purchased to high school and college students," said Knoll.

IT WAS UNDER the influence and guidance of Dene Denny, a pianist and music teacher, and Hazel Watrous, an interior decorator, that the Carmel Music Society flourished and its series of concerts was launched.

The society was formed on Oct. 20, 1927, when several Carmel residents met at the studio home of Denny and Watrous to discuss the future of music in Carmel.

The group decided that an organization was needed to raise money, and to attract performers of national and international stature to the area on a continuing basis.

Prior to the society's founding, concerts were given by local and visiting artists to informal groups that gathered at private homes.

Fritz Wurzmann, society board member since 1929 and Carmel resident since 1927, said Denny had "great initiative and drive." Watrous was a less aggressive person, but very helpful, he said.

"Because they were artists, they turned the business matters over to Mrs. Edward Kluegal," said Wurzmann. She became the first president.

The opening season, 1927-28, included the Hart House String Quartet, pianist Walter Gieseking, contralto Kathryn Meisle, baritone Reinald Werrenrath, and cellist Horace Britt.

These initial concerts were held at the Golden Bough Theater.

Since that time many famous artists have appeared before the society: Vladimir Horowitz, Gregor Piatigorsky, Mischa Elman, Myra Hess, Igor Stravinsky, Jascha Heifetz, Artur Rubinstein, Martha Graham, Rudolf Serkin, Robert Casadesus, Lotte Lehmann, Ezio Pinza, Jan Peerce, Isaac Stern, Andres Segovia, Marian Anderson, Yehudi Menuhin, Helen Traubel, Francis Poulenc, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, Leontyne Price, and Anna Moffo. Some have appeared more than once.

"But we wouldn't have had these artists of international reputation without the generous bequests of many people," Wurzmann said.

"There were nice talks and parties, with glorious groups of people."

"The artists were excellent, though sometimes they weren't to everybody's taste. We also had a number of young artists who later became quite famous. Someone said -- I forget who -- that if he didn't practice for two days he didn't feel that he was as good as he should be, and if he didn't practice for a week then the audience would know.

"When we asked Gieseking how much he practiced, he said he could see the notes before him, in his mind. He was a butterfly collector, and he spent much of his time chasing butterflies around Carmel.

"Stravinsky was a small fellow, with princely tastes. He would drink champagne and nothing else," said Wurzmann.

New Scripture course offered

A new Scripture course entitled "Man Meets God" had its opening session at 10 a.m. today at Carmel Mission. Sister Irmalyn, instructor, describes the course as one which will explore the great themes of revelation in both the Old and New Testaments.

According to Sister Irmalyn, the general approach will be to begin penetrating beneath the surface of God's word in Scripture and to see the revelation of God in relation to ourselves today.

The course will be held in three parts. Part One will last for eight, two-hour sessions on Thursday mornings through Dec. 13. A fee of $6 will cover the costs of text and materials. For further information, call Sister Irmalyn at 624-1271.

Mentally gifted minor program gets grilled

By BOB KENNEDY

CARMEL Unified School District's Mentally Gifted Minor educational program has raised the questsion from the District Trustees, "What does the program (MGM) accomplish? What is its function?"

The questsion was raised last week at the School District meeting at the Carmel Middle School library, after a report was presented by Mrs. Louise Fisher on the program. Mrs. Fisher is a coordinator and resource teacher for the gifted program.

Mrs. Fisher, in her status report on the progress of the program, told members present that presently there are 190 identified Mentally Gifted Minors in the school district. The state requirement for this status is three percent, but she said the amount of gifted students in the district is six percent of the student body.

There are approximately 50 students in the special category. Middle School has 54, and the remainder of the 190 are in the elementary school grades.

Apparently, not completely understanding the state funded program, and questioning what benefit these gifted students are receiving, the board of education suggested the program in other counties be studied, and a report be made back in two or three months. "We should, from the reaction of the board, look into and see what is being accomplished in other districts," Dr. Charles R. Snorf, board clerk suggested.

MOLLIE WILLIAMS, student member of the board, when asked her opinion on the program, replied that she was listed as a Mentally Gifted Minor, but "it's in title only. I have received nothing tangible, unless it helps me get into college -- that would be tangible," she said.

In another business matter, Hugh Smith, an amateur astronomer was warmly received when he proposed donating a telescope and help construct an observatory at Carmel High School.

Smith noted that there is presently no astronomy class available to the students. Calling himself a "very old friend of the school district," he said he would give the district a 15-inch mirror and telescope, and with the district's assistance would construct a 14-foot observatory with dome. He suggested it could be used not only by high school students, but lower grade students and the public as well. "Properly routed," he said, "it could be of interest to the high school and the community."

Hopefully, he added, amateurs and would-be amateurs would be able to use the facility.

The board told Smith they would work closely with him and the district in an effort to build the small observatory.

Reflections on the Carmel art scene, Part IV

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth and final in a series of articles dealing with the personalities and characteristics of the Carmel art scene, and Carmel's esthetic traditions.)

By BRADWELL SCOTT

IF YOU'RE inclined to agree with artists Wasserman and Colburn ("Reflections..." Parts I and III;, you are among those who regard the Carmel "art scene" as a sort of euphemism.

Most art produced and-or exhibited here strikes you as a staid heap of unimaginative "shlock" whose high prices are luringly deceptive to the gullible tourist who won't go back to the city without some remnant of Carmel's other-wordly charm.

The character of the art is sentimental 19th Century naturalism--landscapes, seascapes, sunsets--any surface appearance of nature "represented" competently but not creatively; soporific nostalgia; an overdose of esthetic Ex-lax.

On the other hand, sympathy with the views of James Peter Cost ("Reflections...Part II") leads one to believe that Carmel is "the greatest art center in the world (excluding parts of New York and London); that classic representationalism is the product of the "serious" artist, while modern abstractionists are but mere design technicians capable of producing interesting forms in one reckless, impulsive hour.

But far from eschewing the "modern" idiom, Cost followers gladly embrace it--"anything and everything goes nowadays, and I think that's great," says Cost.

But the difference, in his view, between his variety of representation and Carmel abstractionists, is clear: the first you admire for its complex arrays of light and shadow, its ultimately precise angular perspectives, its minutia of photo-realistic detail, and for its overall image--pleasantly romantic, "beautiful,"--a picture into which we'd like to ascend (with, perhaps, a band of angels and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 elicited from a whole other ontological realm, manifestly blissed-out).

The second you admire for its skillful, if simplistic, execution of form, and often for the degree it comports with the architecture and interior decor of one's house. It does not challenge our faculties of perception, or thereby teach us to see things in a new way. The argument that it does is essentially pseudo-intellectual and unwarrantedly disruptive to the simple enjoyment of art.

"I think the general public really knows what they like and why--they're good judges," says Cost.

Now as a final statement on the Carmel art scene, we introduce Alex Gonzales, chairman of the Monterey Peninsula College art department, and life-time artist in his own right. For 10 years he has lived and exhibited in Carmel, and has been named by a number of his colleagues as one of five or six "really creative people" still living here. He nevertheless resigned from the Carmel Art Association, membership in which has been long-upheld as very "selective."

He has read all of the views expressed in the "Reflections" series to date, and was most anxious to give his own opinions--without, he stressed, implicating or trying to represent the views of the college.

"Today there are many competent artists living within an 18-mile radius of Carmel. Competent, yes; creative, no---technically correct, flambuoyant perhaps, but the inventiveness, the aliveness, the experimentation, the creative surges of the giants are not within these people," Gonzales said (he referred to modern, nationally-known artists such as Gorky, Pollack, Kline, Still, DeKooning).

EXPOUNDING ON that spirit which he says is lacking among Carmel artists, Gonzales said: "My personal feeling...is that art has to be coupled with a living philosophy. A living philosophy of what you are and what you can do. In the "can do" category the doing has to be of a monumental nature. One can't toy with exercises in the mixing of paint on a palette and gently paste the paint on the canvas. The individual has to be involved with a greater scope of what he is all about and what the world is as he sees it and feels it."

"The copying of the 'Still Life with Fruit' is just not enough, "Gonzales went on. "In some way the soul has to enter the painting to let it sing poetic phrases, and with some the creative juices flow--these are the movers, these are the great ones, these are the courageous ones who don't stay with what they've learned from their masters."

In contradistinction, Gonzales said that in Carmel there never has been "'great' monumental, international, or even national art here. We have been living in a cocoon thinking that this place is the chosen one," he said.

"I live in Carmel and I find it very difficult to defend my point of view," Gonzales continued. "I remain here because of the incredible natural beauty of the place. I try not to get discouraged when I see what passes for art in this twilight zone, but it becomes most difficult when there are 70 galleries displaying their wares and vying for the attention of the gullible tourist."

Insofar as Carmel's reputation as an "art center" is concerned, Gonzales said "Carmel art is really a big joke to the serious artist just as Laguna Beach and Taos, Scottsdale is. The important centers, contrary to what Mr. Cost believes, are New York, Los Angeles, Tokyo, Dallas, Paris, London and San Francisco. Carmel will never become an art center. It may be an art colony but it doesn't have art."

Sternly reacting to Cost's statement that "the most accurate test of the quality of almost anything is now, and has probably always been, how much would you be willing to pay for it," Gonzales said:

"How wrong he is in expressing this view! The esthetics of art, music, drama, poetry, etc., the really important things are not measured in money terms. How can fine art be measured this way. It can't, of course, What is being measured here is commercial art--commercialism, and of that we have plenty."

But the fact remains that Carmel art is widely sought and admired. To explain this, Gonzales stated that "Carmel art, and to a greater extent the Carmel Art Association--the oldest gallery organization--caters to an unintelligent, uneducated eye in their selection of what to put in their home, above the fireplace, hotel room, the gift for mother, etc."

"Most artists here are 'surface' people -- that is, they are mainly concerned with the depiction of the exterior of their chosen object. The genuine or creative great will find inspiration in the interior and the exterior and will proceed to 'create' with a great deal of human gut. Some have a lot of macho gut and usually it's coupled with a great deal of sensitivity and honesty."

GONZALES WAS THEN asked how the esthetic dimension of Carmel life could be deepened or re-invigorated into something meaningful.

"Is there hope for Carmel? No. Not unless you destory all of the 70-odd galleries in Carmel and got a fresh start. That would be the drastic move."

Anticipating, perhaps, arguments that his views are remiss for not offering constructive alternatives, Gonzales stated these essentials for artistic revivification in Carmel:

(1) Limit the number of galleries to not more than 20.

(2) This would be done by the newly-created "Art Board."

(3) Set up a format of what is expected in a quality control, if this is possible.

(4) Recognize that at present all of the galleries display conservative "safe" art. There is not a single contemporary gallery here.

(5) Recognize that this is not now a "serious" art center.

The Carmel Pine Cone

SECTION II

(6) Work toward encouraging and bringing in current good work for exposure in an art center or museum setting. This center would necessarily have to have an excellent curator-director, and a good staff.

(7) Do something about really emphasizing and acknowledging that art awareness is necessary and important to mental, spiritual, and creative growth.

(8) Let the "art center" run film classes, and a crash program to train the eye, among other things.

(9) Buy or get a loan for contemporary pieces--sculpture, paints, graphics, crafts, etc., to adorn some municipal and other buildings.

(10) Encourage business to display art.

"All of the arts could be included and accounted for in this plan: poetry readings, dance, film, theater, music--they might just flourish with the natural beauty that is already here," Gonzales added.

Despite his severe criticisms--shared by a number of prominent Carmel artists, Gonzales emphasized that these new directions for Carmel "could work, and we could truly be a cultural center--the only one of its kind in the world."

The mayor's report

By BERNARD ANDERSON

IF, AT THE time that Mrs. Gaasch of the Friends of the Carmel Library was conducting the sale of surplus library volumes at Sunset Center, you were disturbed at seeing two fire trucks drive up on Mission Street, the reason wasn't that a riot was likely to occur by the enthusiastic citizens seeking to purchase the volumes.

Fire Chief Bob Updike and Public Works Superintendent Askew, aided by City Forester Greg D'Ambrosio, had made arrangements with Cultural Director Frank Riley to clean the four years accumulation of pine needles and debris from Sunset's eaves. We thought Updike and his men would scrape the debris foot-by-foot but the ingenuity of Updike decided otherwise. He took a hose to the top of the 40-foot ladders and squirted the debris with a powerful jet from the nozzles.

Try that method on your house when you clean up for the winter.

Being on the Scotchy side with the citizens' tax money, the City Council just couldn't agree to paying $432, which was the lowest contract bid for cleaning the eaves. Having the job done by our city crews justified our belief and faith in the city employes' ability to meet any city problem.

Judge Gordon Campbell, our former Superior Court Judge, is still active and functioning in an honored role. On Oct. 27 he will preside at the hearing of Mother Earth's case against defendant Man for having carelessly and-or wrongfully used Mother Earth's water resources. So sayeth the Institute of Foreign Studies which has set the date of the trial for 10 a.m. in Samuel F.B. Morse Auditorium at 440 Van Buren, Monterey. The Institute has declared the trial in honor of United Nations Day commemorating the establishment of a United Nations Environmental Agency. Selection of juries is now in progress.

THE CITY has received a letter from the City of Newport Beach which I believe outlines and parallels our problems in maintaining our public beach. Following are quotes from their letter:

"The City of Newport Beach is requesting the League of California Cities to endorse legislation requiring the State to share in the local cost of all beach cities to maintain and operate coastal beaches.

"Inasmuch as you represent a beach city having problems similar to those being experienced by Newport Beach, it would be appreciated if you would take time to read the attached address. In addition it would be very helpful to me to hear from you and determine whether this proposal can be endorsed by your city delegate. If your city can endorse this proposal, possibly your delegate would want to address the convention with a few supportive remarks.

"I know of no other regional park that carries the demand for service as does a popular beach area. With the passage of the California Coastal Initiative (Proposition 20) this past year, the beach area, and especially public access to these recreational spots, are being emphasized. Every day new demands for public access are being imposed upon coastal communities. Representatives of Newport Beach believe that the state should recognize these burdens and assist to some degree in sharing them. I do not believe that it is necessary or desirable for the state to assume control and operation of the beach areas, for I believe that local units can be more responsive and do a better job. Like state highways within municipal boundaries, or like railroad tracks that traverse some cities, regional beach areas should be recognized as a state responsibility and funds for their maintenance made available to cities as funds are now available for highways or railroad tracks.

"With the recent passage of the Property Tax Relief Act of 1972 (SB 90) restricting local jurisdictions from increasing their property tax levels, and with the new emphasis being placed upon public usage of the coastal zone, the state must be convinced of the equity in financial support to coastal communities. An equitable formula for state financial participation can be prepared which will apply to all coastal communities maintaining beach recreational facilities. Because of the above reasons, the City Council of Newport Beach resolved 'That all the people of the State of California be afforded the opportunity of sharing in the cost of coastal preservation and maintenance for their pleasure, through a State-wide tax subsidy to the governmental agencies within the coastal zone.' "

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of two articles dealing with the purposes, programs and people of the Monterey Peninsula Chapter of the National Organization of Women.)

By LISA MCKANEY

TRADITION IS NOT a decree, or a law, or even written down in any manner to be adhered to. Tradition is a belief, held by many, which can be spread by word of mouth or by example from one generation to another.

It may even be an inherited pattern of thought or action, taught by one, and conditioned by another to accept tradition as a way of life.

But like the seasons, people change too. What was best for one generation may not be best for the next. To defy this reasoning may be shocking to some, a relief to others. Women now are beginning to realize home is not where they have to be.

The tradition that a woman's place is in her home was an unquestionable belief generations ago. At that time, it was necessary for the woman to bear children, for few survived. At that time, a woman was a vital and necessary part of the family. Her home had to sustain life, since there were no other means of support except through family industry.

Now women are beginning to realize they are not needed as much at home as they once were, and the question inevitably arises, "What am I supposed to do now?"

"Do I dare pursue a profession, or stay home where I belong?"

"When I woke up and found out I had a baby girl, I immediately thought -- well, maybe she'll marry someone famous," said Ms. Linda Mackey, assistant coordinator of the Monterey Chapter of the National Organization for Women (N.O.W.).

"Then I realized what great potential this baby had, and that she can do anything she wants. And I thought how there was something very wrong in what I said," she added.

"What made me become involved with N.O.W. was a growing awareness in me (ever since I became active in a political campaign for a state senator), which compelled me to join N.O.W. because it was a group of particular, growing women who were seeking to know themselves as persons, and a new awareness as women," said Pati Belknap, coordinator of the Monterey Chapter of N.O.W.

"To me, women's liberation is that we facilitate human liberation -- to be able to view people as persons, rather than as fulfilling certain roles, without taking into account the needs of that real person; what their aspirations are; where they may be in their development at that point of history," explained Ms. Belknap.

THE ASSUMPTION IS, according to Ms. Belknap, if women emerge in a new way and fulfill themselves as individuals, that this would destroy the structure of the family -- an assumption Ms. Belknap is very much against.

"When I talk about human liberation, it's my belief that each person has the option to explore new possibilities. People change, which brings about the evolvement of self-confidence (which is what consciousness-raising is all about)," Ms Belknap emphasized.

Action is the key word in N.O.W.'s development. Women become part of the group, not only to discuss the social ills of the times, but to do something about it. For example, if they don't like the stereotyping of a particular advertisement, they write to the advertiser and tell him so.

Self-acceptance is another key concept of women's liberation.

One of Carolyn Lord's ways of self-acceptance was to stop wearing make-up (for a while) just to see if she liked herself the way she really looked. Coordinator of the Education Task Force, Ms. Lord said a woman almost feels dependent upon the need to wear make-up (mostly through the conditioning of advertisements).

"For a while I was pretty miserable, not even to wear lipstick. Now I look back on it and laugh. I may go back to wearing make-up, but I doubt it. At least I know I have that option," Ms. Lord commented.

"Consciousness-raising is the heart of what the movement is all about. The kind of things we have been sharing on a feeling level, and an experiential level, are what happens at consciousness-raising. It's not an encounter group, and not necessarily a therapy group.

"It allows us to come together to share common experiences; be supportive; to find out why it is a woman is not assertive - why the woman involved in a relationship always plays the submissive role, and feels obligated to say "I'm sorry," feeling guilty if they try to express their true feelings," Ms. Mackey explained.

At the time of this conversation, the Monterey Chapter of N.O.W. held its monthly meeting in the next room, with a special feature on assertiveness training -- how a woman can ask for what she wants; how to escape a traditional role.

A summary of N.O.W.'s Statement of Purpose will be explored. Similar to Ms. Belknap and Ms. Mackey's ideas, the statement includes this concept:

"We believe the time has come to move beyond the abstract argument, discussion and symposia over the status and special nature of women which has raged in America in recent years; the time has come to confront, with concrete action, the conditions that now prevent women from enjoying the equality of opportunity and freedom of choice which is their right, as individual Americans, and as human beings.

"N.O.W. is dedicated to the proposition that women, first and foremost, are human beings, who, like all other people in our society, must have the chance to develop their fullest human potential. We believe that women can achieve such equality only by accepting to the full the challenges and responsibilities they share with all other people in our society, as part of the decision-making mainstream of American political, economic and social life."

Know your county government

By WILLARD BRANSON
Monterey County Supervisor

ONE OF THE MOST demanding offices in a county is that of the district attorney. Essentially, his office has three major functions to fill and we will try to broadly outline them for our readers.

Bearing in mind that famous quotation that "justice is the guardian of liberty," the first duty is to see that justice is done.

Our Dist. Atty., William Curtis, has brought a great deal of energy to this office. It has been my pleasure to work alongside him at various times. For instance, at San Francisco I witnessed a day in dourt when Curtis and Ed Barnes, assistant district attorney, were pressed to the very limits of endurance without losing their equanimity. On another occasion, Curtis left a dinner at his home to counsel a teenager during what could have been the most critical time in his life. Our district attorney spent more than three hours in pleading the merits of the teenager's own decision. It brought into sharp focus the fact that while the law is the law -- the depth of perception and empathy with which it is applied determines the quality of the man who must apply it.

This supervisor feels that in Monterey County, we have such a district attorney. It is certain that he won't please all of the people, of course. However, he has brought new impetus to the office, and it should be as certain that he is doing an excellent job for the vast majority who have given him their trust.

If a given case requires it, in doing justice, the district attorney, through his deputy, acts as the public prosecutor.

The office of the district attorney is a quasi-judicial office, in that the district attorney decides what charges will be filed. Under existing law in California, if the district attorney does not concur, then criminal charges cannot be filed in the courts, without the intervention of the attorney general of the state of California.

In Monterey County, there are more than 50,000 criminal complaints filed each year, not including parking tickets. Of that 50,000, approximately 36,000 are traffic tickets.

Because of a large transit population in different areas within the county, Monterey County has an arrest rate which is much higher than one would normally expect to find in a county of 250,000 people. Obviously, this higher arrest rate means a great deal more work for the district attorney's office.

The second duty of the district attorney is to collect money from absent parents. This work centers itself around the children who are on welfare, or who are in danger of going on welfare. In the past two and one-half years, the amount of collections has increased 55 per cent to a total more than $1.5 million.

This program has been successful in reducing welfare expenditures, and is effecting a substantial savings to the taxpayers. It is anticipated that by the end of this calendar year, more than $1.8 million will be collected for these children.

THE THIRD DUTY of the district attorney is to detect crime and arrest criminals. This function is primarily the responsibility of the local law enforcement agencies. Quite often, local law enforcement agencies will request the assistance of the district attorney in investigating crimes.

One of the areas where significant impact has been made, concerns the hard narcotics problem. Within the district attorney's office is the special activities unit, which has been concerning itself primarily with the non-user seller of hard narcotics. This unit, in conjunction with local law enforcement agencies, and state and federal narcotics agents, has been extremely successful arresting people charged with this type of crime. The most recent significant arrest took place involving 41 people who were arrested primarily on charges of sales of heroin and cocaine. These cases are presently pending. Additionally, the investigative staff investigates police officers and corruption of public officials.

Another major investigative effort of the district attorney involves Soledad State Prison, and the crimes which are committed there.

Other duties of the district attorney are to advise the grand jury and to investigate and file suit when deemed appropriate in consumer fraud cases, and to initiate and provide for public nuisance abatements. Also, another obligation is to carry out any inter-county investigations deemed necessary, or called for, by the grand jury.

Because of the duty of the office, the district attorney must be admitted to practice law before the Supreme Court of the state.

There are three offices of the district attorney of Monterey County; in Salinas, Monterey, and King City. The total staff is 65 3/4 people, with an amount budgeted for fiscal year 1973-1974 of $964,335. At any given time, there are approximately 2,000 active criminal cases in the office, and approximately 5,000 family support files.

In addition to the above, the district attorney is also very active in training programs for law enforcement personnel.

Is there an absolute Truth?

Many of us are looking for firmer ground, for convictions we can stand on. How do we find them?

In all ages there have been those who have held to high ideals — incorruptible integrity, moral courage, unselfed action.

Each of these individuals has gleaned some insight into Truth which motivated and strengthened him.

In our day there is a book which penetrates the instability of mortal life. It speaks of provable laws of God, good and awakens in men a developing sense of unshakable faith.

The book is Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy.

Recipes from all over for Veterans Day

By PHYLLIS JERVEY

WITH ANOTHER three-day holiday just arriving and Indian summer still unpredictable, it seems apropos to plan a "weather permitting" party.

Whether to eat in or outside might be a last minute necessity. For smooth uncomplicated service let guests and family serve themselves either at beach barbecues, patio charcoal cook-outs, in front of crackling fireplaces or more formally in the dining areas.

Veterans Day represents real Americana. We have chosen an admixture from various sections of our country for distinctive dishes. These are my best procurable collection of time-honored recipes. Shall we start in Virginia?

Mint Juleps or Vermouth Cassis
James River Fried Chicken

Make fried chicken from your own favorite recipe but the following is what our cook taught me the James River Virginia way. Mary always used freshly killed poultry. After cleaning these she disjointed them and soaked them in the tap lukewarm water briefly. Next, each part entered a big crockery pot with salt. Covered, it remained in the "icebox" overnight. The next morning to get ready for "after-church-around-oneish," flap chicken into another bowl containing flour. Do not coat heavily, just what will usually stick to the chicken. Fill a heavy cast-iron skillet with one cup bacon drippings. Add chicken, cover with heavy lid and an old-fashioned iron on its top so that no air will enter to moisten; lift lid but quickly once during the 45 minutes it takes. Turn pieces over to brown evenly. Cover securely again. Cook on wood stove or equivalent at low heat.

For Pan Gravy: Add one cup whole milk, two tbsps. butter and one half cup flour to bottom of pan, season to taste, smoothen into gravy. Serve with candied yams, black eyed peas, Southern greens and:

Special Spoonbread

This ancient "receipt" comes from Bowling Green, Virginia, and is well over 300 years old -- still infallible. First beat four fresh farm eggs; add three tsps. baking powder, one and one half tsps. salt and three fourths cup waterground white cornmeal. Mix with wooden spoon in one direction. Add slowly one qt. fresh milk that has stood at room temperature temporarily. Stir again. Pour into greased loaf pans or twelve gem pans. Bake in 350 F. over 30 minutes on lower shelf. Serve with corn syrup. Makes eight portions. They go like crazy. Now we come to Florida:

Baked Crabmeat

One lb. crabmeat; four tbsps. butter; two tbsps. flour; one and one half cups milk; salt to taste; juice of one small onion; juice of one half lime or lemon; one tsp. Worcestershire; one tsp. fresh minced parsley; dash cayenne; splash of celery salt; two eggs, beaten; buttered bread crumbs.

Pick crabmeat to remove bits of shell. Melt butter in heavy saucepan. Blend in flour; add milk. Stir over low heat until thickened. Season with eggs. Do not let boil. Mix sauce with crab. Pour into Pyrex baking dish. Top with crumbs. Bake at 350 about 40 minutes. The beauty of this is it can be prepared the day before, refrigerated, then heated thoroughly. This can replace the Virginia fried chicken or be an addition on the buffet. Other Virginia items go well with the crab.

Florida Key Lime Pie

One tbsp. unflavored gelatin; one quarter cup cold water; four eggs, separated; one cup sugar, divided; one third cup fresh lime juice; one half tsp. salt; two tsps. grated lime peel; green food coloring.

Soften gelatin in cold water. Beat egg yolks; add one half cup sugar, lime juice, salt. Cook over hot water, stirring until thick. Add grated peel and gelatin. Stir until dissolved; tint pale green. Cool. Beat egg whites stiff but not dry. Slowly add rest of sugar, beating after each addition; fold into lime mixture. Pour into Graham pie shell (already baked and found on grocery shelves. Chill until firm. Garnish top with halved white grapes and mint sprigs to resemble the real thing.

Oh, to be there in Florida...palm trees...pompano, blue crabs...

Carmel is also an attraction. Why should its fickle sun disappear? Yet from far and wide visitors continue to arrive bumper-to-bumper. Quaint shops, gorgeous scenery, equable climate and versatility. Now we offer something for everyone.

Fruited Wine Cooler
Hamburger Rounds and/or Frankfurter Specials
Shine or Fog Casserole
Deep Apple Pies

Fruited Wine Cooler. To "cool off" from your current would-be so-called love affair, try this curative:

One pint blueberries; three bananas, diced and sprkinkled with lemon juice; one can pineapple tidbits; one can lemonade concentrate, undiluted; rose or sauterne wine.

Combine fruits with syrup and lemonade. Chill, place one half cup fruit mixture in each tall glass. Add ice cubes. Each fills hers or his with choice of wine. Not too dangerous!

We suggest that you make up your own combinations of marinade in which to soak the ground round meat balls. To hold them intact, add rolled oats (from package), salt, pepper, mustard. Then a potent mixture of Marinade is made from:

Two cups red wine; one half cup wine vinegar; one onion, grated; one garlic clove, crushed; one tbsp. A-1 sauce; two whole cloves; one crushed bay leaf; mixed herbs of rosemary, oreganao, etc.; one tsp. garlic salt; one tbsp. soy sauce.

Combine ingredients. Pour over meat in refrigerator. Strain, add oil, brushing often during barbecuing. Make a separate dish of sauteed fresh mushrooms as a come-and-get-it.

What makes the frankfurters so special? They are absolutely unpolluted. Just steamed, that's all.

The Shine or Fog Casserole is concocted out of whatever is on hand. One suggestion is:

Old Monterey Bean Pot

Two lb. cans red kidney beans; two tbsps. bacon fat; two garlic cloves, minced; one bayleaf, crumbled; pinch each of native subtle herbs; salt and pepper; juice from pickled pears, peaches or sweet pickles; one raw red thinly sliced large onion; one half cup strong coffee; brandy to taste.

Bake this unusual combination until beans (first soaked overnight) are ready to eat . . . never overcooked . . . ever on the ready for patio, beach, fireplace. Strengthening too.

Sons

My sons are grown.
Advice that I would give
I must not give.
I must not caution or advise.
I must disguise
from them my deep concerns.
I sometimes yearn
for all the years I spanked
or scolded.
Sometimes cried
when my authority as parent was denied.
When willfully they would walk a separate way.
I could not stay them then and even less
can stay them now.
I must not touch the tender heart;
the wounds and bruises they endure.
Must keep quite pure
my counsel.
They are grown.
They must face each crises
in their lives -- alone.
Yet there is a way to help them, they not knowing.
I can pray.

Trained at the University of Oregon, Kay has performed at the Mission Ranch piano bar for a total of about 12 years. Often, someone will just hum a few bars and then she picks up the melody from there!

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS and great audience participation numbers typify the performance of "Briley and Branch" with Jeff Gilkinson at the Capn's Hook Lounge in the Holiday Inn, Monterey. One of their more popular requests is "Nobody's Business But My Own." They also play good rock numbers like "Break My Mind." Judy was once the lead singer with Harry James and has performed on TV with Merv Griffin, Jackie Gleason and others. Pat has written and recorded 18 songs. Together with Jeff, she has performed in Las Vegas, Tahoe, Seattle and Alaska.

Mrs. Marguerite Schuhart, teacher and lecturer on the Bible, will be in Carmel to offer non-denominational and non-interpretative courses on "The Bible as Literature."

Two series, a total of 10 lectures is entitled "Formative Period of Israel," which is described as a basic background course that will trace the evolution of the Israelite monarchy from its "Founding Fathers" the Patriarchs to the three kings of the United Empire. The lectures will be delivered daily from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Oct. 29 through Nov. 2.

"The Ministry of Jesus the Christ," the second series, will involve a presentation of both the acts and teachings of Jesus' ministry as portrayed by the four Gospel writers. An attempt will be made to understand the geographical and historical background in which Christ lived. These lectures will be at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 28 and 29, Nov. 1 and 2, and at 10:30 a.m. on Nov. 3.

Mrs. Schuhart completed her undergraduate work with Dr. Carl Knopf at the University of Southern California. Her studies have concentrated on historical, archaeological and literary approaches to the Bible.

Project surveys class

The Carmel High School class of 1962 is currently being studied as part of Project TALENT, a nationwide survey supported by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The purpose of the project is to help improve the educational process and career guidance programs by learning from the experiences, both good and bad, of 1960 high school graduates.

The class of '62 was first surveyed by Project TALENT in the spring of 1960 during their sophomore year. This follow-up survey, now being conducted 13 years later, is designed to learn what has happened to them during the years in which they have grown to young adulthood.

In September, a follow-up questionnaire was mailed to the last known address of each member of the class of '62 who participated in Project TALENT in 1960.

It is necessary that many persons of the class of '62 respond to the questionnaire, if the study is to be accurate. Based on the information that is collected a Career Data Book will be published. This book is intended to provide students and counselors with summary information on the interests, aptitudes, and abilities of persons who enter various career fields.

Any person in the class of '62 from Carmel High School who has not received a follow-up questionnaire is urged to write the Project at P.O. Box 1113, Palo Alto, 94302 and give his current address so a questionnaire can be sent.

Touring Shakespeare's England -- parallels with Carmel

By GUNNAR NORBERG
Norberg Travel Service

When my wife, Wies, and I found it possible somewhat suddenly to take a delayed honeymoon in Europe early last month, we felt that we would have to see what the British today are doing in the presentation of Shakespeare drama.

(As many readers no doubt know, I have been in charge of the Shakespeare plays presented both last year and this past summer at the Forest Theater here.)

I had known it might be difficult to get tickets on short notice both in London and in Stratford-on-Avon where the Royal Shakespeare Company presents its plays, and that turned out to be the case but through the interest and cooperation of a competent London agency, good seats were secured both for a performance in London of "Julius Caesar" and of "Romeo and Juliet" at Stratford.

I had, of course, heard many times from many people about the quality and excellence of the Shakespeare repertoire presented through the years by the widely renowned Royal Shakespeare Company, but I had never before attended a production either in London or Stratford.

The "Julius Caesar" we saw was a matinee performance. The theater was old and the seats were well worn but comfortable. The stage was well equipped but the scenery was on a bare-bones basis, though that very fact did, at times, create an effective background for the setting of a particular episode being presented.

The actors were skilled and particularly outstanding were those appearing in the important roles of Brutus and Mark Antony. The costuming was appropriate and excellent.

Because of the detailed and elaborate sets the Forest Theater Guild here has used, it seemed to me rather startling to see the seemingly slight staging used by the Royal Shakespeare Company, even though the stark effect suitable in certain scenes was noticeably heightened by it. The central and all but sole piece used in the sequential settings of the play, was an enormous blood-red cloth, hung perhaps a third of the way up the back of the high and bare stage.

At times it served as a red carpet on which Caesar and his commanders marched to the front of the stage; at others, it served as a kind of regal canopy when suspended on poles at opposite, forward ends of the stage. High above the big stage in the top box at the left, musicians blew great curved horns suggesting effectively the heavy and mighty tread of Roman legions in Caesar's day.

While there is not space here to go into any detailed review of "Julius Caesar"--which is not doubt familiar from school and college days to most readers anyway--I can say that Wies and I enjoyed the Royal Shakespeare Company's presentation, even though it also seemed to me that our own Forest Theater Guild here in Carmel has been doing even better in the preparation of setting and scenic effects.

By KENNETH BULLOCK
Principal, Carmel High School

COMPETITIVE athletics for young ladies have come some distance since great-grandmother's day when tennis in long-skirted costumes was about the only such activity approved by society.

While the athletic program at Carmel High School draws most of its enthusiasts from the males of the campus, athletic activities for the girls have long existed at the school and are expanding even further with the encouragement and support of the school board and the high school administration.

For many years, the girls' program was found almost exclusively in activities involving the Girls' Athletic Association. This school club met after school and participated intramurally and in interschool "field day" competition with other schools in a number of sports. The emphasis was on participation rather than the extremes of interschool competition, the quality of skill was usually commensurate with the low-keyed approach, and the direction normally came from an enthusiastic female instructor.

In Carmel's case, the leadership for the program for many years has come from Mrs. Phyllis Crockett, girls' physical education instructor. On occasion in the past year or two, she was able to garner some assistance from the male coaching staff for swimming and tennis activities that conflicted with the girls' basketball program in the fall.

During this school year some significant changes have occurred in the old approach to girls' athletics. The Board of Education demonstrated its belief that equality should exist in the athletic programs for both sexes by agreeing to employ, on an extra-pay-for-extra-duty basis, enough coaches to assist the development of the girls' program in the same manner that they have in the past for the boys.

A dual program for the girls exists this year: tough interscholastic competition in tennis and swimming, where the team has a well-qualified coach who works only with that sport, and a continued form of GAA activity in a variety of sports where a single coach, Mrs. Crockett, devotes her time to a "fun" after school program with some elements of interschool lower-key competition. This program, however, is undergoing change now, tending more toward the competitive level of boys' sports.

The girls' tennis team this year has some 25 young ladies out in competition under the direction of Robert Walch, who will also coach the boys' team this spring. Walch, although a newcomer to the school, has had many years of successful coaching experience in boys' tennis in the Santa Barbara area. Between 14 and 18 matches will be played with schools on the Peninsula, such as Pacific Grove, Santa Catalina, and Monterey, as well as others in the County.

Afternoon practices on the Padre courts, plus the same amount of competition that the boys usually get, makes the program similar in most respects, except that male spectators can exercise their chauvinistic tendencies by admiring the young ladies in their attractive tennis attire much more than they ever did knobby-kneeded young men in the spring sports program.

GIRLS' SWIMMING, under Robert Walthour of the high school coaching staff, has brought out more than 20 young ladies. They practice daily, sandwiching their efforts around the male water polo team -- the girls get first crack at the pool -- and they have another workout on Saturday mornings. The girls average 14,000 yards of swimming per week, which obviously takes this into the realm of serious competition. Presently some eight matches, plus the championship meet at Seaside of the Monterey Peninsula Girls' Swimming Association, comprise their schedule.

Mrs. Crockett continues to head the GAA level competition. The year starts with a basketball program during the first quarter. An eight game schedule is set up for the two squads of female basketeers. During the second quarter of the year, field hockey takes over, starting with recreational play in November and four interscholastic efforts in December and January. Volleyball -- girls, boys, coed -- takes up the third quarter and is one of the most popular activities, sometimes having 70 to 80 people in participation. The spring fourth quarter brings out the softball program, and at least eight games are scheduled with other Peninsula schools. Badminton and gymnastics will be added in all likelihood in the near future.

For the young ladies of the school who enjoy physical activity but are not necessarily interested in athletics as such, the school offers an extracurricular experience in dance after school hours. Marikay Bridges, physical education instructor at the school, runs a twice-a-week program where technical warm-ups, movement patterns, and improvisations are stressed. This will lead to one or two full evening productions such as were offered for public edification last year.

Current California Interscholastic Federation rulings have now made it possible for girls to participate in all forms of school athletic programs, including those normally thought to be for "men only." To date, no young ladies have turned out for the football team, but they are technically welcome. Track and field will be the most likely sport to attract female competitors, but the full scale of male athletics is now open to the female segment of the student body. Who says that Women's Lib hasn't arrived in the sweat socks division of Carmel High School?

The fisher

Once they supplied tons of fish...today th

The fishing activity around Monterey Bay was private and unorganized at the turn of the century. This began to change as the demand grew for the plump, tender sardines that swam beneath the choppy waters from Santa Cruz to Point Lobos.

F. E. Booth arrived in Monterey in 1895 and began experimenting with new fish canning methods. After his first cannery was destroyed by fire he built Monterey's first large cannery and a tumultuous new industry was born.

The pilchard had once been merely bait for salmon fishers, but it was fast becoming a gourmet's delight in the rich Eastern markets. By 1904, Booth's cannery was hand-packing four tons of sardines a day during the season. He hired a young Italian fisherman, Pietro Ferrante, when canning processes became so streamlined that supply became a problem.

e few remaining boats are supplying fresh fish for the local restaurants.

Ferrante sent to his native Italy for two big lampara fishing nets (huge, oblong nets buoyed by corks at the top and weighted at the bottom.) After Ferrante taught the California fishermen how to spread the new nets, they scooped up tons of fish at one haul and Booth's business thrived even more.

Two more canneries were opened by ex-Booth employes--one the well-known Hovden Cannery. By 1918 there were nine canneries operating in the successful fishing industry.

The U.S. Government began placing large orders for the high protein Monterey sardines as World War I approached and the demand for cannery workers and fishermen grew. When these war-originated contracts disappeared Cannery Row felt the numbing effects of its first depression. The recession was short-lived and fishing resumed in full force--Cannery Row was fast becoming "The Sardine Capitol of the World."

Along with the tons of sardines that might be scooped up by the purse seiners, there would often be salmon, squid, mackerel and anchovies making it a record catch. As the fishermen finished their night-long work they would wait impatiently in their boats just off the skeleton piers and hoists as the workers sluiced the squirming mass of fish into buckets and nets for the canneries.

By 1928, the purse seiners were adopted by most of Monterey's fishermen and Ferrante's lampara nets became a thing of the past. The huge purse seines could be closed at the bottom and sent down to a depth of 15 fathoms. They would sometimes scoop up more fish than the smaller boats could carry. Each year the pursing fleet became larger, and even though limits were set the catches kept getting larger and larger.

Cannery Row boomed again with the advent of World War II. Tons of fish were brought in to the canneries by the fishermen. Prosperity was everywhere. In the peak year on Cannery Row more than 235,000 tons of fish were brought to the canneries.

There are many theories about the disappearance of the sardines. Several voices had been warning the industry that it was living on borrowed time. Perhaps the super-efficient purse seines had decimated the pilchard population. Many claimed that a shift in the ocean currents had dropped the water temperatures and the sardines had moved south. Others felt that a series of violent storms had broken up and washed away the great piles of undersea wreckage which the sardines had used as spawning grounds. With the disappearance of the sardines, Cannery Row died.

Some of the hardier fishermen continued to fish for the few squid and anchovies that still inhabited the bay. Monterey fishing returned to the private unorganized activity it had been at the turn of the century. Today, several of our local restaurants send out their own boats to provide the fresh fish served. Essentially this is all that remains of the once-gigantic fishing industry.

STANDING JUST off the skeleton piers and hoists, tired men and smelly boats wait impatiently while the workers sluice the squirming mass of fish into buskets and nets. The canneries operated around-the-clock along Ocean View Avenue. The best sardines were carefully packed, colorfully labeled and quickly sold at premium prices. The valuable oil was bottled, the scraps were dried, ground up, stuffed into 100 lb. bags and sold for fish meal feed and fertilizer. Nothing was wasted. CONGENIAL ATMOSPHERE, good food and kind and friendly service--that's what I found at James and Helen Kolonics' Hungarian Village Restaurant (next to the Steinbeck Theatre on Cannery Row). I enjoy their Hungarian Goulash and Chicken Paprikash. Also try their Roast Duck or Country Squire's Choice (Pork chop, stuffed cabbage and homemade Hungarian sausage served with potatoes). If you are a chocolate lover, try Rigo Jancsi for dessert. . .chocolate layers filled with an unbelievable chocolate cream and topped with a chocolate glaze.

IF YOU FEEL creative when it comes to salads you'll be sure to enjoy the salad bar at the Fat Admiral on Cannery Row. Mike Tancredi's and Jim Gilbert's new restaurant has a beautiful view of Monterey Bay. Also worth viewing is the unique glass window in the floor where you can see the waves lapping against the pilings holding up the old Monterey Canning Co. in which it is housed. Besides the renowned steaks, rack of lamb and teriyaki chicken there are several new fish entrees which are caught right outside in the bay. Rock Cod and Red Snapper are fresh daily and fried in dill weed and butter.

WOK COOKING is featured in the kitchen at Willie Lum's China Row Restaurant. This method of quick cooking is just one of the many Chinese customs used by Willie in the kitchen. Everything is done with a special flair at China Row . . . salads are heaped on a fan shell and served resting in a bed of ice. A gong rings out and the name of each dinner party is given as they are seated. Try Willie Lum's own soup - rich chicken broth with Chinese greens and black mushrooms. The ginger beef has distinctive flavors of fresh ginger roots and other Chinese spices complimenting these tender strips of beef. Chicken Kona Kai is fresh tender chicken marinated in teriyaki sauce, then deep fried. Both lunch and dinner are served daily at China Row.

A GOURMET DELIGHT for two is the Bouillabaisse at The York on Cannery Row. It is a steaming tureen of sea fare, brimming with Neptune's tastiest treasures, served with a Caesar Salad tossed at your table. The restaurant serves a large selection of seafoods and prime steaks. Their specialty is roast prime rib of beef with its natural juice. The York was originally a house of ill repute during the peak of the sardine fishing days on Cannery Row.

THE LISBON PUB is a family type restaurant in Cannery Row Square. Franklin DeOliveira has brought a little bit of Portugal to Cannery Row in this restaurant. Try the Sangria and then enjoy one of their seafood dishes: Caldeirada de Peixe - Portuguese Seafood Stew made with Rock Cod, Red Snapper and Sea Bass in a delicate sauce of wine and herbs; Lisbon Favorite - shelled clams and rock cod in wine sauce; and Bacalhau A'Portuguesa - boiled cod garnished with eggs, olives, vegetables, potatoes and parsley. A lunchtime special is the "Watergate Special" (a crab and shrimp sandwich with Franklin's own Louie dressing) "so big everything keeps spilling out."

MY CHEF this week is Chef Felix Roux of the Chez Felix restaurant in Cannery Row Square. Felix was born in Provence, France, where his father still owns a restaurant in Toulon. Felix and his wife Annie are steeped in the best traditions of the finest of French Cuisine. Felix was apprenticed in restaurants all over France before emigrating to America. His intimate and truly French restaurant only seats 12 parties of diners, which enables him personally to prepare such entrees as Gratin de riz de veau sauce Duxelle, and Paupiettes de sole Normande.

Parent volunteers organize

VOLUNTEER AIDES for the Carmel Unified School District met this week at the home of Mrs. Fran Gaver in Carmel Valley to organize a parent volunteer organization.

Attending were parents of students, principals of the various schools in the district and members of the Carmel Unified School District Trustees.

Mrs. Richard (Betty) Bell, district coordinator volunteer for the school district was introduced to the principals and parent-faculty club board members from each school.

"The volunteer aide program is designed to bring members of the community into classrooms for specific presentations to students and to identify locations in the community where students can visit to witness activities or items pertinent to their educational program," Mrs. Bell explained.

"Volunteering is not new to the Carmel school district," Mrs. Bell told her audience. "The volunteer aide program will be a support and supplement to what is already happening.

"Our community is a rich source of untapped volunteers with training and enterprise," Mrs. Bell continued. "Volunteers will be used only as a direct request from a teacher or staff member."

A workshop was conducted during the informal meeting by Dr. Rich Hawkins and Gordon Kramer with the principals and coordinators to develop guidelines for the volunteer aid program.

Parents, teachers, students meet at Family Day

Santa Catalina Family Day gave parents an opportunity recently to talk to the teachers, view their children's work, and, more important, spend the day together as a family.

First graders proudly paraded their parents to the Lower School science room to show them their brine shrimp which had recently hatched.

Grey skies cleared for a warm afternoon of relay races, tennis, soft-ball, volley-ball and swimming followed by a picnic.

The relay races were organized by the eighth grade class, and were not meant to be easy. First through fourth graders and their fathers competed in such feats as running with a marble in a spoon, hop, skip and jump over benches and through hulla-hoops. Assisting the races were Mrs. Jack Waltz and Mrs. Kennedy White of Carmel.

A father-daughter soft-ball game for fifth through eighth graders followed. Tennis and volley ball games were also held with terrific rooting sections of picnicking families.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

The Christian Science Lesson-Sermon this Sunday includes the following verse from Titus: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men." The subject of the sermon is "Doctrine of Atonement."

Services are open to all and begin at 11 a.m. and at 5 p.m., and Sunday School is held at 11 a.m., at First Church of Christ, Scientist, Carmel, Monte Verde at 6th.

Another passage in the lesson, from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, reads: "Each successive stage of experience unfolds new views of divine goodness and love."

The program to be heard next Sunday over station KRML at 6:30 a.m. will be devoted to the Bible and is titled "The Bible Opened Is A Treasure Found." This is part of the Christian Science Series, "The Truth That Heals."

FIRST BAPTIST

The Sunday morning congregation at First Baptist, Carmel is taking a good look at the Apostle Paul's teachings in the book of Ephesians. The lesson for this Sunday is "Faith Is Self Distrust."

The order of service gives opportunity for members of the congregation to participate as lay leaders and for everyone present to share in the worship through hymns, responses, offerings and prayers.

First Baptist meets at 4:30 p.m. Sunday for an hour of fellowship and outdoor games, and assembles at 6 p.m. for an hour of hymn singing and group study. This Sunday evening the congregation will begin a special series entitled, "Learning To Live." The studies will consider the life tensions that develop through poor self-image and methods of gaining self-acceptance.

The Young Adult group meets Sunday evenings after the church service with Rick Riso, and high schoolers will meet with him this week at 28185 Robinson Canyon Way. The High School youth will attend a week-end camp at Mt. Hermon.

COMMUNITY

At the 10:30 a.m. Worship Service of the Community Church of the Monterey Peninsula, the Rev. Howard E. Bull will speak on "When God Made a Rainbow." The theme will consider the beauty and goodness which is part of our existence on earth, and God's promise to continue that good.

A Youth Sermonette will be provided by one of the congregation during the Worship Service.

PRESBYTERIAN

Guest Michael Cassidy, from "African Enterprise," will speak at the Carmel Presbyterian Church at 9:15 a.m. and 11 a.m. on Sunday. Services will also be offered at 8 a.m.

WAYFARER

Minister James Warne Sanders will conduct a service entitled "Who is this Lazy Rascal?" at the Church of the Wayfarer this Sunday. Services are at 9:30 a.m. and 11 a.m.

This absolutely enchanting house sits at the very edge of a virgin forest, and yet is within the city limits of Carmel and close to the village. Warmth and elegant informality is its keynote, quality and quiet understatement, its theme. The exterior is of rough sawn redwood and the interior is of rough sawn Monterey pine. Architecturally designed and built with master craftmanship, it is indeed a gem. Otter Cove

The Neighbors (Ben Lyon)

It's called Otter Cove because those most delightful of sea creatures float on their backs in the turquoise waters of the very private little coves where you can observe them in peace.

The Cove (Geo. Robinson)

Only seventeen fortunate families will hold a front seat on the sea forever. Soon coastline property may be impossible to acquire; certainly, there is nothing else like this only five miles from a community as unique as Carmel. City deliveries, fire protection, a few minutes to the world's great golf courses — yet one of these acre-plus sites is a private world of its own.

The Front Yard (Geo. Robinson)

All sites are different — different shapes, different terrain, different viewpoints on the sea. But all share the ocean frontage to perpetuity, and all have the drama of surf and sunlight and moonlight on the water, and whales and otters and cormorants and gulls and tide pools and the fabulous flowers and succulents of the Carmel Coast.

The utilities are underground, the sites are ready, so you could build your new home or be on your way to a fabulous investment in your future in one of the most beautiful ocean-front spots in the world. Inquire!

Padres walk over Gonzales, 21-7

By DAN HAFSTROM

Carmel High School football coaches Jason Harbert, Monty Feekes and Carl Merlo worked for a year preparing for the game with the Gonzales Spartans Saturday, and it all paid off in an ecstatic 21-7 victory.

The Padres beat Gonzales at their own game: hard-hitting, hard-running football, subduing a powerful Gonzales running backfield with an indomitable defense.

The Padres pass defense put pressure on Gonzales quarterback Mike Silva, allowing him to complete only one pass to Jeff Sommers during the entire game.

Both teams fought to keep each other in their own territory. Carmel punted on every fourth down but one, even with two or three yards to go for the first down.

The Padres tried for a first down with just one yard to go in the second quarter. Mike Ford carried the ball through the right side, scrambling past tacklers to a touchdown.

Gonzales declined to punt only twice; once for an unsuccessful field goal attempt just prior to the half, and late in the fourth quarter with Carmel leading 21-7.

Harbert considered key points of the game as Gonzales' loss of halfback Manuel Trevino early in the first quarter, a goal-line stand by the Padres and a bad field goal kick that squelched Gonzales hopes to catch the Padres in the first half, and a fourth quarter touchdown that guaranteed the game for Carmel.

Trevino was knocked flat by defensive back Mike Ford and was out for the rest of the game, forcing backup quarterback Jeff Sommers to take his place.

The Padres started the game with Mike Chappell completing a pass over the middle to split-end Rick Parker moving the Padres from their 36-yard line to the Gonzales 22. Back Scott Green shot through an expressway size hole on the left side of the line to gain another 20 yards. Ford pushed up the middle to the one-yard line, then carried again, pushing through the right side behind guard Dean Rilling, tackle Mike Brock and tight end Dave Irwin for the touchdown.

Sommers snatched Chappell's second and last pass in the game at the Gonzales 45. Halfback Randy Toy dashed through a hole at center instead of following an apparent sweep around the left and ran 58 yards before he was stopped at the Carmel 9. A few plays later, Gonzales had a touchdown.

Rich Fleming gave the Padres the extra yardage needed to set up their next touchdown, gaining 14 yeards on a run to the right. The Padres were forced to punt, but the ball never left Gonzales territory even after their punt.

Green and Chappell moved the ball from Gonzales' 36 to the 20 yard line where the Padres were one yard from a first down. Mike Ford charged into the right side of the line, scrambling through to the one yard line, dropped the ball, caught it on the bounce, and stepped over the goal line. Hunter faked a kick as Bill Lemos passed to Irwin in the end zone for two points.

As the half was ending, Gonzales was at the Carmel 12-yard line after blocking Hunter's punt. Failing to break through the Carmel defense, Gonzales tried for a field goal from the 11, but the kick was wide.

With their ground game failing to gain desperately-needed yardage, Gonzales turned to more passing, but the pass defense kept the rush on Silva and he found himself passing hurriedly and inaccurately to well-covered receivers.

The game was sewed up when Green ran 24 yards around the left end for a touchdown in the fourth quarter.

The win over Gonzales was important for the Padres who considered Gonzales the toughest team in the league. "If you can beat Gonzales, you can beat them all," summarized Harbert. "It gives us a chance to go all the way," he said.

Harbert had worried about the Gonzales triple option run from a Y formation, but credited Hunter and Irwin, who doubled as defensive backs, with stopping that play.

"That's the best pressure we've had all year by the defense against a passing quarterback," said Monte Feekes. "During the second half especially, they just surged," he said.

The Gonzales junior varsity squashed Carmel 21-0, but the freshmen won 46-0.

The Padres may be faced with another grinding ground game Friday night against Hollister.

"They're big and strong and they run right over you," Harbert said. Their main strength lies in their strong, but slow, running backs.

The game is 8 p.m. at Hollister with a junior varsity game at 6 p.m. and a freshman game at 4 p.m.

During halftime, the Carmel booster club announced the winner of a raffle for the ball used in the game against Gonzales. Steve Sherman, a sophomore at Carmel High, won the ball which was presented later in the week, signed by the Carmel players.

The booster club hopes to hold the raffle at each game during the season.
